BHAVAN'S LIBRARY

This book is valuable and NOT to be ISSUED out of the Library TO SECRETARIO PROGRESSION

THE STATE OF

SOCIETY IN FRANCE

DEFORE THE

REVOLUTION OF 1789

AND THE

CAUSES WHICH LED TO THAT EVENT

BY ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE
MEMBER OF THE FRENCH ACADEMY

TRANSLATED BY HENRY REEVE, DCL

THIRD EDITION

LONDÖÑ JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET 1888

FUNDS A PARTICULAR POLICIAN PARTICULAR POLICIAN PARTICULAR PARTICU

CONTENTS.

| | ATORS PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION | [5] [9] |
|---------|--|------------|
| _ | B00K I | |
| CHAPTER | 1 | |
| 11 | Opposing Judgments pissed on the French Revolution at its Origin The Fundamental and Final Object of the Revolution was not as has been supposed, the destruction of Peligious Authority and | 1 |
| ш | the weakening of Political Power Showing that the French Revolution was a Political Revolution | 5 |
| | which followed the course of Religious Revolutions, and for what Reasons | 9 |
| IV | Showing that nearly the whole of Europe had had precisely the same Institutions, and that these Institutions were everywhere | |
| _ | falling to pieces | 12 |
| V | What was the peculiar scope of the French Revolution | 16 |
| | BOOK II | |
| o ore. | France than in any other country | 19 |
| | rior in France to the Revolution of 1783 and not the product of the Revolution or of the Empire as is commonly said | 28 |
| 111 | Institution in France anterior to the Revolution | 36 |
| 11 | Administrative Jurisdiction and the Immunity of Public Officers are Institutions of France anterior to the Revolution | fo |
| v | Showing how Centralisation had been able to introduce itself among the ancient Institutions of France and to supplant with | |
| | out destroying them | 50 |
| 7. | | 54 |
| VΙ | I Of all Furopean hations France was already that in which the Metropolis had acquired the greatest preponderance over the Provinces and had most completely absorbed the whole Empire | 63 |
| VII | | 67 |
| Ľ | | 71 |
| • | The Restruction of Political Liberty and the Estrangement of Classes were the causes of almost all the disorders which led to | |
| | the Dissolution of the Old Society of France | 81 |

| 41 | CONTENTS | |
|----------------|--|-----|
| ב". במחגונס | 7408 | |
| XI | Of the Species of Liberty which existed under the this atomateny, | |
| | | |
| XIL | Show ing that the Condition of the French Peasantry, not with sure | |
| | ing the process of Civiliation, was sometimes worse in the | |
| | Fighteenth Century than it had been in the Interesting | , |
| _xiii | Showing that towards the Mid lie of the Lighteenth Century Sien | |
| | of Letters became the leading Political Men of France, and or | |
| | the effects of this occurrence | , |
| XIV | | |
| | ression amonest the French of the Eighteenth Century, and | |
| | what influence this fact had on the character of the Revolution . 12" | |
| χv | | G |
| XV | | |
| | enoch of the old French Monarchy, and how this very prosperity | |
| | accelerated the Revolution | G |
| XVI | I. Showing that the French People were excited to revolt by the | | | | means taken to relieve them | 5 |
| XVII | | |
| | Revolutionary Education of the People of France 10 | 2 |
| XI | | |
| | Political Revolution, and what were the consequences it pro- | |
| | duced | • 6 |
| Z | X. Showing that the Revolution proceeded naturally from the existing | |
| | State of France | 16 |
| | CIIDAI DAIDAMANA AILAYMAD | |
| | SUPPLEMENTARY CHAPTER. | |
| On | the Pays d'États, and especially on the Constitutions of Languedoc . 1 | 8 |
| | | |
| | | |
| | BOOK III. | |
| | I Of the violent and undefined Agitation of the Human Mind at the | |
| | moment when the French Revolution broke out | |
| | II How this vague perturbation of the Human Mind suddenly became | • |
| | in France a positive passion, and what form this passion at first | |
| | | |

How the Parliaments of France, following precedent, overthrew the

The Parliaments discover that they have lost all Authority, just when they thought themselves masters of the Kingdom

The preparation of the instructions to the Members of the States-General drove the conception of a Radical Revolution home to

V Absolute Power being subdued, the true spirit of the Revolution

VII. How, on the Eye of the Convocation of the National Assembly, the mind of the Nation was more enlarged, and its spirit raised

Monarchy

NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS

forthwith became manifest

the mind of the Feople

201

203

224

229

240

243

. 247

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

TO THE SECOND FDITION

An interval of about seventeen years has elapsed since the first publication of this book in France, and of the trans lation of it, which appeared simultaneously, in England The English version has not been republished, and has long been out of print. But the work itself has retained a lasting place in the political literature of Europe

The historical events which have occurred since the date of its first publication have again riveted the attention of every thinking min on the astonishing phenomena of the French Revolution, which has resumed in these later days its mysterious and destructive course, and a deeper interest than ever seems to attach itself to the first causes of this long series of political and social convulsions, which appear to be as far as ever from their termination

Nor is this interest confined to the state of France alone, for it each succeeding period of our contemporary annals the operation and effects of the same causes may be traced in other countries, and the principles which the author of this book discerned with unerring sagacity derive fresh illustrations every day from the course of events both abroad and at home

For this reason, mainly, this translation is republished at the present time, in the hope that it may be read by men of the founder generation, who were not in being published in the seventh volume of the collected edition of M de Tocqueville's works. They have not before been translated, and they are, I believe, but little known in this country.

These chapters are not inferior, I think, to any of the works of their author in originality and interest, and they have the merit of bringing down his Survey of the State of Irance before the Revolution to the very moment which preceded the convocation of the States General. I have therefore included these posthumous chapters in the present edition, and they form a Third Book, in addition to the two books of the original volume

HENIA REEVE

April 1873

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

THE book I now publish is not a history of the French Revolution, that history has been written with too much success for me to attempt to write it again. This volume is a study on the Revolution

The French people made, in 1789, the greatest effort which was ever attempted by any nation to cut, so to speak, their destiny in halves, and to separate by an aby-s, that which they had hereto-fore been from that which they sought to become hereafter. For this purpose they took all sorts of precautions to carry nothing of their past with them into their new condition, they submitted to every species of constraint in order to fashion themselves otherwise than their fathers were, they neglected nothing which could efface their identity.

I have always thought that they had succeeded in this singular attempt much less than was supposed abroad, and less than they had at first supposed themselves. I was convinced that they had unconsciously retained from the former state of society most of the sentiments, the habits, and even the opinions, by means of which they had effected the destruction of that state of things, and that, without intending it, they had used its remains to rebuild the edifice of modern society, insomuch that, fully to understand the Revolution and its work, we must forget for an instant that France which we see before us, and examine in her sepilchire that France which is no more. This is what I have endeavoured to do, but I have had more difficulty than I could have supposed in accomplishing this task.

The first ages of the French Monarchy the Middle Ages, and the Rerwal of Letters have each given rise to vast researches and profound disquisitions which have revealed to us not only the events of those periods of history, but the laws, the customs, and the spirit of the Government and the nation in those eras. But no one has yet (3ken the trouble to investigate the eighteenth century in the same manner and with the same minuteness. We suppose that we are thoroughly conversant with the French society of that date, because we clearly distinguish whatever glittered on its surface; we possess in detail the lives of the most eminent persons of that day, and the ingenuity or the eloquence of criticism has familiarised us with the compositions of the great writers who adorned it. But as for the manner in which public affairs were carried on, the practical working of institutions, the exact relation in which the different classes of society stood to each other, the condition and the feelings of those classes which were as yet neither seen nor heard beneath the prevailing opinions and manners of the country,—all our ideas are confused and often inaccurate.

I have undertaken to reach the core of this state of society under the old monarchy of France, which is still so near us in the lapse of years, but concealed from us by the Revolution

For this purpose I have not only read over again the celebrated books which the eighteenth century produced, I have also studied a multitude of works less known and less worthy to be known, but which, from the negligence of their composition, disclose, perhaps, even better than more finished productions, the real instincts of the time I have applied myself to investigate thoroughly all the public documents by which the French may, at the approach of the Revolution, have shown their opinions and their tastes The regular reports of the meetings of the States, and subsequently of the Provincial Assemblies, have supplied me with a large quantity of evidence I have especially made great use of the Instructions drawn up by the Three Orders in 1789. These Instructions, which form in the original a long series of manuscript volumes, will remain as the testament of the old society of France, the supreme record of its wishes, the authentic declaration of its last intentions Such a document is unique in history. Yet this alone has not satisfied me.

An countries in which the Administrative Government is already powerful, there are few opinions, desires, or sorrows!—there are few interests or pressons—which are not sooner or later stripped bare before it. In the archives of such a Government, not only an exact notion of its procedure may be acquired, but the whole country is exhibited. Any stranger who should have necess to all the confidential correspondence of the Home Department and the Prefectures of France would soon know more about the French than they know themselves. In the eighteenth century the administration of the country as will be seen from this book was highly centralised very powerful prodigiously active. It was necessarily adding preventing permitting. It had much to promise—much to give. Its influence was already felt in a thousand ways, not only on the general conduct of affairs but on the condition of fumilies and the private life of every individual. Moreover as this administration was without publicity men were not afraid to lay brie before its eyes even their most secret infirmities. I have spent a great deal of time in studying what remains of its proceedings both at Paris and in soveral provinces.

There as I expected I have found the whole structure of the old monarchy still in existence with its opinions its passions its prejudices and its usages. There every man spoke his mind and disclosed his innermost thoughts. I have thus succeeded in acquiring information on the former state of society, which those who lived in it did not possess for I had before me that which had never been exposed to them.

As I advanced in these researches I was surprised perpetually to find again in the France of that time many of the characteristic features of the France of our own I met with a multitude of reclings which I had supposed to be the offspring of the Revolution -a multitude of ideas which I had believed to originate there-a multitude of habits which are attributed to the Revolution alone Everywhere I found the roots of the existing state of French society deeply imbedded in the old soil. The nearer I came to 1789 the more distinctly I discerned the spirit which had presided over the formation the birth and the growth of the Revolution I gradually saw the whole aspect of the Revolution uncovered before me already it is nounced its temperament-its g nins itself. There too I found not only the reason of what it was about to perform in its first effort but still more perhaps an intimation of what it was eventually to leave behind it For the French Revolution las had two totally distinct phases the first during which the French seemed eager to abolish everything in the past, the second when they sought to resume a portion of what they had relinquished M ny of the laws and political practices of the old monarchy thus

I have more especially a od the archives of some of the great Intendance espacially that of Tours which are very complete an I relate to a very extensive direct placed in the centre of France and peopled by a million of inhabitants. My thanks are due to the youngan lable keeper of these records M Grandmason Other I strict Anongest them that of the I e-de-France have slown me that the sense was truncated in the same manner in the greater part of the M miloun suddenly disappeared in 1789, but they occur again some years later, as some rivers are lost in the earth to burst forth agun lower down, and bear the same waters to other shores

(

The peculiar object of the work I now submit to the public is to explain why this great Revolution, which was in preparation at the same time over almost the whole continent of Europe, broke out in Irance sconer than elsewhere, why it sprang spontaneously from the society it was about to destroy, and, lastly, how the old Irench Monarchy came to fall so completely and so abruptly

It is not my intention that the work I have commenced should stop short at this point. I hope, if time and my own powers permit it, to follow, through the vicestides of this long Revolution, thise same Frenchmen with whom I have lived so familiarly under the old monarchy, and whom that state of society had formed—to see them modified and transformed by the course of events, but without changing their nature, and constantly appearing before us with features somewhat different, but eyer to be recognised with features somewhat different, but ever to be recognised. With them I shall proceed to review that first epoch of 1780, when the low of equality and that of freedom shared their hearts—when they sought to found not only the institutions of democracy, but the institutions of freedom—not only to destroy privileges, but to acknowledge and to sanction rights a time of routh, of enthusiasm, of pride, of generous and sincere passion, which, in spite of its errors will like for ever in the memory of men, and which will still long continue to disturb the slumbers of those who seek to corrupt or to enslave them the most noble conquests of 1789-still during to assume that mighty name

I shall purse at the moment when the Revolution appears to me to have nearly accomplished its work and given birth to the modern society of France That society will then fall under my observation I shall endeavour to point out in what it resembles the society which preceded it, in what it differs, what we have lost in this immense displacement of our institutions, what we have

graned by it, and, lastly, what may be our future

A portion of this second work is sketched out, though still unworthy to be offered to the public. Will it be given me to complete it? Who can say? The destray of men is far more observe than that of nations.

[16]

opinion I had of Freedom at a time when Freedom was in favour, I may be allowed to persist in that opinion though she be forsaken.

Let it also be considered that even in this I am less at variance with most of my antagonists than perhaps they themselves suppose. Where is the man who, by nature, should have so mean a soul as to prefer dependence on the caprices of one of his fellowcreatures to obedience to laws which he has himself contributed to establish, provided that his nation appear to him to possess the virtues necessary to use freedom aright? There is no such man. Despots themselves do not deny the excellence of freedom,but they wish to keep it all to themselves, and maintain that all other men are utterly unworthy of it. Thus it is not on the opinion which may be entertained of freedom that this difference subsists, but on the greater or the less esteem we may have for mankind; and it may be said with strict accuracy that the taste a man may show for absolute government bears an exact ratio to the contempt he may profess for his countrymen. I pause before I can be converted to that opinion. I may add, I think, without undue pretensions, that the volume now published is the product of very extended labours. Sometimes a short chapter has cost me more than a year of researches. I might have surcharged my pages with notes, but I have preferred to insert them in a limited number at the end of the volume, with a reference to the pages of the text to which they relate. In these notes the reader will find some illustrations and proofs of what I have advanced. I could largely augment the quantity of themeif this book should appear to require it.

STATE OF SOCIETY IN FRANCE

BEFORE THE

REVOLUTION OF 1789

BOOKI

CHAPTER I

OPPOSING JUDGMENTS PASSED ON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION AT ITS ORIGIN

NOTHING IS better fitted to give a lesson in modesty to philosophers and statesmen than the history of the French Revolution for never were there events more important longer in ripening, more fully prepared, or less foreseen.

The great Frederick himself with all his genius failed to perceive what was coming and was almost in contact with the event without seeing it. Nav more he even acted in the spirit of the Revolution beforehand and was in some sort its precursor, and already its agent with he did not recognic its approach, and when at length it made its appearance the new and extraordinary features which were to distinguish its aspect aimlet the countless crowd of human revolutions still passed unheeded.

The curiosity of all other countries was on the stretch. Every where an indistinct conception arose amongst the nations that a new period was at hand and ragine hopes were excited of great changes and reforms but no one as yet had any suspicion of what the Revolution was really to become. Princes and their ministers lacked even the confused presentiment by which the masses were aritated, they beheld in the Revolution only one of those periodical disorders to which the constitutions of all nations are subject, and of which the only result is to open fresh paths for the policy of their neighbours. Even when they did chance to express a true opinion on the events before them, they did so unconsciously, Thus the principal sovereigns of Germany assembled at Pıllnitz in 1791, proclaimed indeed that the danger which threatened royalty in France was common to all the established powers of Europe, and that all were threatened by the same peril; but in fact they believed nothing of the kind. The secret records of the period prove that they held this language only as a specious pretext to cover their real designs, or at least to colour them in the eyes of the multitude.

2

As for themselves, they were convinced that the French Revolution was an accident merely local and temporary, which they had only to turn to good account. With this notion they laid plans, made preparations, and contracted secret alliances; they quarrelled among themselves for the division of their anticipated spoils; split into factions, entered into combinations, and were prepared for almost every event, except that which was impending.

The English indeed, taught by their own history and enlightened by the long practice of political freedom, perceived dimly, as through a thick veil, the approaching spectre of a great revolution; but they were unable to distinguish its real shape, and the influence it was so soon to exercise upon the destinies of the world and upon their own was unforeseen. Arthur Young, who travelled over France just as the Revolution was on the point of breaking out, and who regarded it as imminent, so entirely mistook its real character, that he thought it was a question whether it would not increase existing privileges 'As for the nobility and clergy,' says he, 'if this Revolution were to make them still more preponderant, I think it would do more harm than good '

CHAP. T.

Revolution, men in France had no distinct notion of what it would do. Amidst the numerous instructions to the delegates of the States General I have found but two which manifest some degree of apprehension of the people. The fears expressed all relate to the preponderance likely to be retained by royalty, or the Court, is it was still called. The weakness and the short duration of the States General were a source of anxiety, and fears were entertained that they might be subjected to violence. The nobility were especially agitated by these fears Several of their instructions provide, 'The Swiss troops shall take an oath never to bear arms against the citizens, not even in case of not or revolt.' Only let the States General be free, and all obuses would easily be destroyed;

the reform to be made was immense, but easy, Meanwhile the Revolution pursued its course. By degrees the head of the monster became visible, its strange and terrible aspect was disclosed; after destroying political institutions it abolished civil institutions also; after changing the laws it changed the manners, the customs, and even the language of France; after overthrowing the fabric of government it shook the foundations of society, and rose against the Almighty hunself. The Revolution soon overflowed the boundaries of France with a vehemence hitherto unknown, with new tactics, with sanguinary doctrines, with armed opinions-to use the words of Pitt-with an inconceivable force which struck down the barners of empires, shattered the crowns of Europe, trampled on its people, though, strange to say, it won them to its cause; and, as all these things came to pass, the judgment of the world changed That which at first had seemed to the princes and statesmen of Europe to be one of the accidents common in the life of a nation, now appeared to them an event so unprecedented, so contrary to all that had ever happened in the world, and, at the same time, so wide-spread, so monstrous, and so incomprehensible, that the human mind was lost in amazement at the spectacle. Some believed that this unknown power, which nothing seemed to foster or to destroy, which no one was able to check, and which could not check itself, must drive all human society to its final and complete dissolution Many looked upon it as the visible action of the devil upon earth. 'The French Revolution has a Satanic character,' says M de Maistre, as early as 1797. Others, on the contrary, perceived in it a beneficent design of Providence to change the face not only of France but of the world, and to create, as it were, a new era of mankind. In many writers of that time may be seen somewhat of the religious terror which Salvant felt at the incursion of the Barbirians Burke, reverting to his first impressions, exclaimed, 'Deprived of the old government, deprived in a manner of all government, France, fallen as a monarchy, to common speculators, might have appeared more likely to be an object of pity or insult, according to the disposition of the circumincent powers, than to be the scourge and terror of them all. but out of the tomb of the mucdered monarchy in France has arisen a vast, tremendous, unformed spectre, in a far more terrific guise than any which ever yet have overpowered the imagination, and subdued the fortitude of man Going straight forward to its end unappalled by peril, unchecked by remorse, despising all common maxims and all common means, that hideous phantom overpowered those who could not believe it was possible she could at all exist,' etc ' And was the event really as extraordinary as it appeared to those who lived at the time when it took place? Was it so unprecedented, so utterly subversive, so pregnant with new forms and ideas as they imagined it to be? What was the real meaning, the real character-what have been the permanent effects of this strange and terrible Revolution? What did it, in reality, destroy, and what has it created?

4

The proper moment for examining and deciding these questions seems now to have arrived and we are now standing at the precise point whence this vast phenomenon may best be viewed and judged We are far enough removed from the Revolution to be but slightly touched by the passions which blinded those who brought it about, and we are near enough to it to enter into the spirit which caused these things to happen Ere long this will have become more difficult, for as all great revolutions when successful, sweep away the causes which engendered them their very success serves to render them unintelligible to later generations

Letters on a Regioide Peace

CHAPTER II.

THE FUNDAMENTAL AND ITNAL OBJECT OF THE REVOLUTION WAS NOT, AS HAS BEEN SUPPOSED, THE DESTRUCTION OF RELIGIOUS AUTHORITY AND THE WEAKENING OF POLITICAL POWER.

ONE of the first acts of the French Revolution was to attack the Church; and amongst all the passions born of the Revolution the first to be excited and the last to be allayed were the passions hostile to religion. Even when the enthusiasm for liberty had vanished, and tranquillty had been purchased at the price of servitude, the nation still revolted against religious authority. Napoleon, who had succeeded in subduing the liberal spirit of the Trench Revolution, made van efforts to restrain its antichristian spirit; and even in our own time we have seen men who thought to atone for their servility towards the meanest agents of political power by insolence towards God, and who whilst they abandoned all that was most free, most noble, and most lofty in the doctrines of the Revolution, flattered themselves that they still remained true to its spirit by remaining irreligious.

Nevertheless it is easy now to convince ourselves that the war waged against religious was but one incident of this great Revolution, a feature striking indeed but transient in its aspect, a passing result of the ideas, the passions, and special events which preceded and prepared it, and not an integral part of its genius

The philosophy of the eighteenth century has rightly been looked upon as one of the chief causes of the Revolution, and it is quite true that this philosophy was profoundly irreligious. But we must be careful to observe that it contains two distinct and separable parts.

One of these relates to all the new or newly revived opinions concerning the condition of society, and the principles of civil and political laws, such, for instance, as the natural equality of mankind, and the abolition of all privileges of caste, of class, of profession, which is the consequence of that equality; the sovereignty of the people, the omnipotence of social power, the uniformity of laws. All these doctrines were not only causes of the French Revolution, most living root of religious belief has over been planted in the heart of the people. All the religious which have perished lingered longest in that abode, and it would be strunge indeed if institutions which tend to give power to the ideas and passions of the people were, as a permanent and inevitable result, to lead the minds of men towards inmicty.

What has just been said of religious, may be predicated even more strongly of social, authority.

When the Revolution overthrew at once all the institutions and all the customs which up to that time had maintained certain gradations in society, and kept men within certain bounds, it seemed as if the result would be the total destruction not only of one particular order of society, but of all order: not only of this or that form of government, but of all social authority; and its nature was judged to be essentially anarchical. Nevertheless, I maintain that this too was true only in appearance.

Within a year from the beginning of the revolution, Mirabeau wrote secietly to the King: 'Compare the new state of things with the old rule; there is the ground for comfort and hope. One part of the acts of the National Assembly, and that the more considerable part, is evidently favourable to monarchical government. Is it nothing to be without parliaments? without the pays detat? without a body of elergy? without a privileged class 'without a nobility?' The idea of forming a single class of all the critizens would have pleased Richelien; this equality of the surface facilitates the exercise of power. Several successive reigns of an absolute monarchy would not have done as much for the royal authority as this one year of revolution.' Such was the view of the Revolution taken by a man capable of guiding it

As the object of the French Revolution was not only to change an ancient form of government, but also to abolish an ancient state of society, it had to attack at once every established antibality, to destroy every recognised influence, to efface all traditions, to create new manners and customs, and, as it were, to purge the human mind of all the ideas upon which respect and obedience had hitherto been based. Thence arose its singularly anarchical charecter.

But, clear away the rums, and you behold an immense central power, which has attracted and absorbed into unity all the fractions of authority and influence which had formerly been dispersed amongst a host of secondary powers, orders, classes, professions, families and fiddiyduals, and which were disseminated throughout the whole fabric of society. The world had not seen such a power since the fall of the Roman Limpite. This power was created by the Revolution, or rather it arose spontaneously out of the ruins which the Revolution had left. The governments which it founded are more perishable, it is true, but a hundred times more powerful than any of those which it overthank, we shall see hereafter that their fragility and their power were owing to the same

It was this simple, regular, and imposing form of power which Mirabean perceived through the dust and rubbish of ancient, half-demolished institutions. This object, in soite of its creatness. was still invisible to the eyes of the many, but time has gradually unveiled it to all eves At the present moment it especially attracts the attention of rulers at as looked upon with admiration and envy not only by those whom the Revolution has created but by those who are the most alien and the most hostile to it. all endeavour, within their own dominions to destroy immunities and to abolish privileges They confound ranks, they causlise classes, they supersede the aristocracy by public functionaries, local franchises by uniform enactments and the diversities of authority by the unity of a They labour at this revolutionary task with Central Government unwerried industry, and when they meet with occasional obstacles. they do not scruple to copy the measures as well as the maxims of the Revolution They have even stirred up the poor against the rich, the middle classes against the nobility, the personts against their feudal lords The French Revolution has been at once their carse and their instructor

CHAPTER DI

SHOWING THAT THE FRENCH PEVOLUTION WAS A POLITICAL REVOLUTION WHICH FOLLOWED THE COURSE OF RELIGIOUS REVOLUTIONS, AND FOR WHAT REASONS

ALL mere civil and political revolutions have had some country for their birth-place, and have remained circumscribed within its limit. The Irench Revolution, however, had no territorial boundary—far from it, one of its effects has been to efface as it were all uncent frontiers from the map of Europe. It united or it divided minhand in spite of haws, traditions, characters, and languages, turning fellow-countrymen into enemies, and foreigners into brothers, or rither, it formed an intellectual country common to men of every nation, but independent of all separate nationalities.

We should search all the annuls of history in vain for a political revolution of the same character, that character is only to be found in certain religious revolutions. And accordingly it is to them that the French Revolution must be compared, if any light is to be thrown upon it by analogy

Schiller remarks, with truth, in his 'History of the Thirty Years' War,' that the great Reformation of the sixteenth century had the effect of bringing together nations which scarcely knew each other, and of closely uniting them by new sympithies. Thus it was that Frenchmen narred against Frenchmen, while Englishmen came to their assistance, men born on the most distant shores of the Biltic penetrated into the very heart of Germany in order to distand Gramans of wiloss existance they had never heard mutithen. International wars assumed something of the character of civil wars, whilst in every earl war foreigners were engaged. The former interests of every nation were forgotten in behalf of new interests, territorial questions were succeeded by questions of sinceple. The rules of diplomacy were involved in inextricable confusion, greatly to the horror and amazement of the politicians of the time. The very same thing happened in Europe after 1780.

The French Revolution was then a political revolution, which in its operation and its aspect resembled a religious one. It had every peculiar and characteristic feature of a religious movement, it not only sprind to foreign countries, but it was carried thither by preaching and by propaganda. It is impossible to concert a stranger spectacle than that of a political revolution which inspires proselytism, which its adherents princh to foreigners with as much ardiour and passion as they have shown in cancting it at home. Of all the new and strange things displayed to the world by the Irench Rivolution, this assuredly is the newest. On penetrating deeper into this matter, we shall most likely discover that this similarity of effects must be produced by a latent similarity of causes

The general character of most religious is, that they deal with man by himself, without taking into consideration whatever the laws, the traditions, and the customs of each country may have added to his original nature. Their principal nim is to regulate the relations of man towards God, and the rights and duties of men towards each other, independently of the various forms of society The rules of conduct which they inculcate apply less to the man of any particular country or period than to man as a son, a father, a servant, a master, or a neighbour. Being thus based on human nature itself, they are applicable to all men, and at all times, and in all places It is owing to this cause that religious revolutions have so often sprend over such vast spheres of action, and have seldom been confined like political revolutions, to the territory of a single nation, or even of a single race. If we investigate this subject still more closely, we shall find that the more any religion has possessed the abstract and general character to which I refer, the wider has it spread in spite of all differences of laws, of climite, and of races

The pagan religions of antiquity, which were all more or less bound up with the political constitution or the social condition of each nation and which displayed even by their dogmas a certain national and even municipal character, seldom spread beyond their own territorial limits. They sometimes engendered intoler ance add persecution but proselvism was to them unknown Accordingly there were no great religious revolutions in Western Europe previous to the introduction of Christianity which eavily broke through buttiers that had been insurmountable to the pagan religious and rapidly conquered a large portion of the human race. It is no disrespect to this holy religious to say, that it partly owed its triumph to the fact that it was more free than any other faith from everything peculiant to any one nation, form of government, social condition period or race.

The French Revolution proceeded as far as this world is concerned in precisely the same manner that religious revolutions proceed with regard to the next, it looked upon the citizen in the CHAP III

abstract, irrespective of any particular society, just as most religious look upon man in general independently of time or country did not endeavour merely to define what were the especial rights of a French citizen, but what were the universal duties and rights of all men in political matters. It was by thus recurring to that which was least peculiar and, we might almost say, most natural in the principles of society and of government that the Trench Revolution was rendered intelligible to all men, and could be unitated in a hundred different places

As it affected to tend more towards the regeneration of mankind than even towards the reform of Trance, it roused passions such as the most violent political revolutions had never before excited inspired a spirit of proselvtism and created the propaganda gave to it that aspect of a religious revolution which so terrified its contemporaries, or rather, we should say, it became a kind of new religion in itself-a religion, imperfect it is true, without a God, without a worship, without a future life, but which nevertheless, like Islam, poured forth its soldiers, its anostles, and its martirs over the face of the earth

It must not, however, be imagined that the mode of operation pursued by the French Revolution was altogether without precedent, or that all the ideas which it developed were entirely new In every age, even in the depths of the Middle Ages, there had been agitators who invoked the universal laws of human society in order to subvert particular customs, and who have attempted to oppose the constitutions of their own countries with weapons burrowed from the natural rights of mankind. But all these attempts had fuled, the firebrand which ignited Europe in the eighteenth century had been easily extinguished in the fifteenth Revolutions are not to be produced by arguments of this nature until certain changes have already been effected in the condition, the halats, and the manners of a nation, by which the nfinds of men are prepared to undergo a change

CHAPTLR IV.

SHOWING THAT NEARLY THE WHOLE OF FUROFI HAD HAD PRE-CISELY THE SAME INSTITUTIONS, AND THAT THESE INSTITUTIONS WERE PUTRYWHERE FALLING TO PIECES

The tribes which overthrew the Roman Empire, and which in the end formed all the modern nations of Europe, differed among each other in rice, in country, and in language, they only resembled each other in barbaism. Once established in the dominions of the empire they engaged in a long and fierce struggle, and when at length they thing guide a firm footing they found themselves divided by the very runs they had made. Civilisation was almost extinct, public order at in end, the relations between man and man had become difficult and dangerous, and the great body of European society was brollen up into thousinds of small distinct and hostile societies, each of which lived apart from the rest Nevertheless certain uniform laws arose all at once out of the midst of this incoherent mass.

These institutions were not copied from the Roman legislation, andeed they were so much opposed to it that recourse was had to the Roman law to alter and abolish them. They have certain original characteristics which distinguish them from all other laws invented by mankind. They corresponded to each other in all their purts, and, taken together, they formed a body of law so compact that the articles of our modern codes are not more perfectly coherent, they were skilfully framed laws intended for a half-savage state of society.

It is not my purpose to inquire how such a system of legislation could have arisen, spread and become general throughout Europe But it is certain that in the Middle Ages it existed more or less in every European nation, and that in many it prevailed to the exclusion of every other

I have had occasion to study the political institutions of the Middle Ages in France in England, and in Germany, and the further I proceeded in my labours the more was Io astonished at terriers, in which from century to century were recorded the limits of fiels and the quit-rents, the dues, the services to be rendered, and the local customs. I have seen rolls of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries which are masterpieces of method perspicially, concision, and acuteness. The further we advance towards modern times the more obscure, ill-digested, defective, and confused do they become, in spite of the general progress of enlightenment. It seems as if political society became barbarous, while civil society advances towards civilisation.

¹ See Note I on the Power of the Roman Law in Germany

Even in Germany, where the ancient constitution of Purope Indiperserved many more of its primitive features than in Prince, some of the institutions which it had created were already completely destroyed. But we shall not be so will able to appreciate the ravages of time when we take into account what was gone, as when we examine the condition of what was left.

The municipal institutions which in the flurteenth and four-teenth centuries had raised the chief towns of Germany into rich and enlightened small republies, still existed in the eighteenth, but they were a mere semblance of the past. Their ancient traditions seemed to continue in force, the magistrates appointed by them bore the same titles and seemed to perform the same functions but the activity, the energy, the municipal patriotism the maily and prolific virtues which they formerly inspired, had desappeared. These ancient institutions appeared to have collapsed without losing the form that distinguished them.

All the powers of the Middle Ages which where still in existence seemed to be affected by the same disease, all showed sym ptoms of the same languor and decay Nay more, whatever was mixed up with the constitution of that time, and had retained a strong unpression of it even without absolutely belonging to those institutions at once lost its vitality. Thus it was that the aristo cracy was seized with senile debility even political freedom, which had filled the preceding centuries with its achievements, seemed stricken with impotency wherever it preserved the peculiar characteristics impressed upon it by the Middle Ages Wherever the Provincial Assemblies had maintained their ancient constitution unchanged they checked instead of furthering the progress of civilisation they seemed insensible and impervious to the new spirit of the times Accordingly the hearts of the people turned from them towards their sovereigns The antiquity of these insti tutions had not made them venerable on the contrary, the older they grew the more they fell into discredit, and, strangely enough, they inspired more and more hatred in proportion as their decay rendered them less capable of mischief 'The netual state of things,' said a German writer, who was a friend and contemporary of the period anterior to the French Revolution, 'seems to have become generally offinise to all, and sometimes contemptible. It is strange to see with what disfavour men now look upon all that is old. New impressions creep into the bosom of our families and disturb their peace. Our very housewives will no longer endure their ancient furniture'. Nevertheless, at this time Germany, as well as France, enjoyed a high state of social activity and constantly increasing prosperity. But it must be borne in mind that all the elements of life, activity and production, were new, and not only new, but antagonistic to the past.

See Note III on the Decay of the Free Towns of Germany

Royalty no longer had anything in common with the royalty of the Middle Ages, it enjoyed other pierogatives occupied a different place, was imbued with a different sentiments, the administration of the State spread in all directions upon the runs of local authorities, the organised array of public officers superseded more and more the government of the nobles All these new powers employed methods and followed maxims which the men of the Middle Ages had either not known or had condemned and, indeed, they belong to a state of society of which those men could have formed no idea.

In England, where, at the first glance, the ancient constitution of Europe might still seem in full vigour, the case is the same Setting aside the ancient names and the old forms in England the feudal system was substantially abolished in the seventeenth century, all classes of society began to intermingle, the pretensions of buth were effaced, the anstocracy was thrown open, wealth was becoming power, equality was established before the law public employments were open to all, the press became free the debates of Parliament public, every one of them new principles, unknown to the society of the Middle Ages It is precisely these new elements gradually and skilfully incorporated with the ancient constitution of England, which have revived without endangering it, and filled it with new life and vigour without destroying the ancient forms. In the seventeenth century England was already quite a modern nation which had still preserved and, as it were, embalmed some of the relics of the Middle Ages This rapid view of the state of things beyond the boundaries of France was essential to the comprehension of what is about to follow, for no one who has seen and studied France only, can ever—I venture to affirm—understand anything of the French Revolution

CHAPTER V.

WHAT WAS THE PECULIAR SCOPE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

The preceding pages have had no other purpose than to throw some light on the subject in hand, and to facilitate the solution of the questions which I laid down in the beginning, namely, what was the real object of the Revolution? What was its peculiar character? For what precise reason it was made, and what did it effect?

The Revolution was not made, as some have supposed, in order to destroy the authority of religious belief. In spite of appearances, it was essentially a social and political Revolution; and within the circle of social and political institutions it did not tend to perpetuate and give stability to disorder, or (as one of its chief adversaries had said) to methodise anarchy; but rather to increase the power and the rights of public authority. It was not destined (as others have believed) to change the whole character which civilisation had previously assumed, to check its progress, or even essentially to alter any of the fundamental laws upon which human society in Western Europe is based. If we divest it of all the accidental circumstances which altered its aspect in different countries and at various times, and consider only the Revolution itself, we shall clearly perceive that its only effect has been to abolish those nolitical institutions which during several centuries had been in force among the greater part of the European nations, and which are usually designated as feudal institutions, in order to substitute a more uniform and simple state of society and politics, based upon an equality of social condition

This was quite sufficient to constitute an immense revolution, for not only were these ancient institutions mixed up and inter-woven with almost all the religious and political laws of Europe, but they had also given rise to a crowd of ideas, sentiments, habits, and manners which climp around them. Nothing less than a frightful convulsion could suddenly destroy and expel from the social body a part to which all its organs adhered. This made the Revolution appear even greater than it really was; it seemed to destroy everything, for what it did destroy was bound up with, and formed, as it were, one flesh with everything in the social body

However radical the Revolution may have been, its innovations were, in fact, much less than has been commonly supposed, as I shall show hereafter What may truly be said is, that it entirely destroyed, or is still destroying (for it is not at an end), every part of the ancient state of society that owed its origin to aristocratic and feudal institutions-everything in any way connected with those institutions, or in any degree, however slight, imbued with their spirit. It spared no part of the old world, save such as had always been foreign to those institutions, or could exist apart from them Least of all was the Revolution a fortuitous event It took the world by surprise, it is true but it was not the less the completion of a long process, the sudden and violent termination of a work which had successively passed before the eyes of ten generations If it had not taken place, the old social structure would equally have fallen sooner in one place and later in another -only it would have crumbled away by degrees instead of falling The Revolution effected on a sudden and by a viowith a crash lent and convulsive effort, without any transition, without forethought, without mercy, that which would have happened little by little if left to itself This was its work

It is surprising that this view of the subject, which now seems so easy to discern, should have been so obscured and confused even to the clearest perceptions

'Instead of redressing their grievances, says Burke of the representatives of the French nation 'and improving the fabric of their state, to which they were called by their monarch and sent by their country, they were made to take a very different course. They first destroyed all the balances and counterpoises which serve to fix the State and to give it a steady direction, and which firms sure correctives to any volent spirit which may prevail in any of the orders. These balances existed in the oldest constitution and in the constitution of all the countries in Europe. These they rashly destroyed and then they melted down the whole into one incongruous, ill-connected mass.'

Burke did not perceive that he had before his eyes the very Resolution which was to abolish the ancient common law of Lurope, he could not discern that this and no other was the very question at issue

^{*} Burke's speech on the Army Fstimates 1"90

But why, we may ask, did this Revolution, which was imminent throughout Europe, break out in France rather than elsewhere, and why did it there display certain characteristics which have appeared only in part? This second question is well worthy of consideration, and the miguil form the subject of the following book.

perty always remained very incomplete. He was obliged to till his field in a certain manner under the eye of the master, and he could neither dispose of it nor mortgage it at will. In some cases he was compelled to sell its produce; in others he was restrained from selling it; his obligation to cultivate the ground was absolute Even his inheritance did not descend without deduction to his offspring; a fine was commonly subtracted by the lord

I am not seeking out these provisions in obsolete laws They are to be met with even in the Code framed by Frederic the Great and promulgated by his successor at the very time of the outbreak of the Prench Revolution.1

Nothing of the kind had existed in France for a long period of The peasant came, and went, and bought, and sold, and dealt, and laboured, as he pleased The last traces of serfdom could only be detected in one or two of the eastern provinces annexed to France by conquest; everywhere else the institution had disappeared; and indeed its abolition had occurred so long before that even the date of it was forgotten The researches of archæologists of our own day have proved that as early as the thirteenth century serfdom was no longer to be met with in Normandy.

But in the condition of the people in France another and a still greater revolution had taken place. The French peasant had not only ceased to be a serf; he had become an Owner of Land. This fact is still at the present time so imperfectly established, and its consequences, as will presently be seen, have been so remarkable, that I must be permitted to pruse for a moment to eramme it.

It has long been believed that the subdivision of landed property in France dates from the Revolution of 1789, and was only the result of that Revolution The contrary is demonstrable by every species of evidence

Twenty years at least before that Revolution, Agricultural Societies were in existence which already deplored the excessive subdivision of the soil 'The division of inheritances,' said M. de Turgot, about the same time, 'is such that what sufficed for a single family is shared among five or six children. These children and their families can therefore no longer subsist exclusively by the land ' Necker said a few years later that there was in France an immensity of small rural properties

I have met the following expressions in a secret Report made to one of the provincial Intendants a few years before the Revolution:—'Inheritances are divided in an equal and alarming manner, and as every one wishes to have something of everything, and everywhere, the plots of land are infinitely divided and perpetually subdivided.' Might not this sentence have been written in our days?

I have myself taken the infinite pains to reconstruct, as it were, the survey of landed property as it existed in France before the Revolution, and I have in some cases effected my object. In pursuance of the law of 1790, which established the land-tax, each parish had to frame a return of the landed properties then existing within its boundaries. These returns have for the most part disappeared; nevertheless I have found them in a few villages, and by comparing them with the rolls of the present holders, I have found that, in these villages, the number of landed proprietors at that time amounted to one-hulf, frequently to two-thirds, of their present number: a fact which is the more remarkable if it be remembered that the total population of France has augmented by more than one-fourth since that period.

Already, as at the present time, the love of the peacant for property in land was intense, and all the presions which the possession of the soil has engendered in his nature were already inflamed. 'Land is always sold above its value,' said an excellent contemporary observer; 'which arises from the passion of all the inhabitants to become owners of the soil. All the savings of the lower orders which elsewhere are placed out at private interest, or in the public securities, are intended in France for the purchase of land.'

Amongst the novelties which Arthur Young observed in France, when he visited that country for the first time, none struck him more than the great division of the soil among the persantry. He averred that half the soil of France belonged to them in fee. 'I had no idea,' he often says, 'of such a state of things,' and it is true that such a state of things existed at that time nowhere but in France, or in the immediate neighbourhood of France.

In Eugland there had been peasant landowners, but the rumber of them had already considerably decreased In Germany there had been at all times and in all parts of the country a certain number of peasant freeholders, who held portions of the soil in fice. The peculiar and often eccentric liws which regulated the property of these peasants are to be met with in the oldest of the Germanic customs, but this species of property was always of an exceptional character, and the number of these small proprietors was very limited.

¹ See Note VII., Peasant Lands in Germany.

The districts of Germany in which, at the close of the eighteenth century, the peasants were possessed of land and lived almost as freely as in France, lay on the banks of the Rhine.¹ In those same districts the revolutionary passions of France spread with the utmost velocity, and have always been most intense. The tracts of Germany which remained, on the contrary, for the longest time inaccessible to these passions, are those where no such tenures of land had yet been introduced. The observation deserves to be made.

It is, then, a vulgar error to suppose that the subdivision of landed property in France dates from the Revolution. This state of things is far older. The Revolution, it is true, caused the lands of the Church and a great portion of the lands of the nobility to be sold; but if any one will take the trouble, as I have sometimes done, to refer to the actual returns and entries of these sales, it will be seen that most of these lands were purchased by persons who already held other lands; so that though the property changed hands, the number of proprietors increased far less than is supposed. There was already an immensity of these persons, to borrow the somewhat ambitious but, in this case, not inaccurate expression of M. Necker.

The effect of the Revolution was not to divide the soil, but to hiberate it for a moment. All these small landowners were, in reality, ill at ease in the cultivation of their property, and had to bear many charges or easements on the land which they could not shake off

These charges were no doubt onerous? But the cause which made them appear insupportable was precisely that which might have seemed calculated to diminish the burden of them. The peasants of Irance had been released, more than in any other part of Durope, from the government of their lords, by a revolution foot less momentous than that which had made them owners of the soil.

Although what is termed in France the Ancien Régime is still very near to us, since we live in daily intercourse with men born under its laws, that period seems already lost in the night of time. The radical revolution which separates us from it has produced the effect of ages it has obliterated all that it has not destroyed. I'ew persons therefore can now give an accurate answer to the sumple question—How were the rural districts of France administered before 1789? And indeed no answer can be period. It is often said that the Trench nobility, which had long ceased to take part in the government of the State, preserved to the last the administration of the rural districts—the Seigneurs coverned the peasantry. This again is very like a mistake.

¹ See Note VIII., Nobility and Lands on the littine 2 See Note IX., Effect of Usury Laws on Land,

CRAP I

In the eighteenth century all the affairs of the parish were managed by a certain number of parochial officers, who were no longer the agents of the manor or domain, and whom the Lord no longer selected. Some of these persons were nominated by the

Intendant of the province, others were elected by the persants themselves The duty of these authorities was to assess the taxes, to repair the church, to build schools, to convoke and preside over the vestry or parochial meeting. They attended to the property of the parish and determined the application of itthey sued and were sued in its name. Not only the lord of the domain no longer conducted the administration of these small local affairs, but he did not even superintend it. All the parish officers were under the government or the control of the central power, as we shall show in a subsequent chapter. Nav. more. the Seigneur had almost ceased to act as the representative of the Crown in the parish, or as the channel of communication between the King and his subjects He was no longer expected to apply in the parish the general laws of the realm, to call out the multia, to collect the taxes, to promulgate the mandates of the sovereign, or to distribute the bounty of the Crown All these duties and all these rights belonged to others The Seigneur was in fact no longer anything but an inhabitant of the parish, separated by his own immunities and privileges from all the other inhabitants His rank was different, not his power The Seigneur is only the principal inhabitant was the instruction constantly given by the Provincial Intendants to their Sub-delegates and in Austria, in which the reigning princes had been most successful in shaking off the control of the nobles in the general affairs of the state, they had left to that class, to a great degree, the administration of rural affairs, and though the landed proprietor was, in some places, controlled by the Government, his authority had nowhere been superseded.

To say the truth, the French nobility had long since lost all hold on the administration of public affairs, except on one single point, that namely of justice. The principal nobles still retained the right of having judges who decided certain suits in their name, and occasionally established police regulations within the limits of their domain; but the power of the Crown had gradually cut down, limited, and subdaed this seignorial jurisdiction to such a degree that the nobles who still exercised it regarded it less as a source of authority than as a source of income.

Such had been the fate of all the peculiar rights of the French nobility. The political element had disappeared; the pecuniary element alone remained, and in some instances had been largely increased.

I speak at this moment of that portion of the beneficial privileges of the aristocracy, which were especially called by the name of feudal rights, since they were the privileges which peculiarly touched the people.

It is not easy to ascertain in what these rights did precisely still consist in 1789, for the number of them had been great, their diversity amazing, and many of these rights had already vanished or undergone a transformation; so that the meaning of the tensa by which they were designated was perplaxing even to contemporaires, and is become obscure to us. Nevertheless by consulting the works of the domanial jurists of the eighteenth century, and from attentive researches into local customs, it will be found that all the rights still in evistence at that time may be reduced to a small number of leading heads; all the others still subsisted, it is true, but only in volated cases

The traces of segnoral labour-rents (cortées) may almost everywhere be detected, but they were already half extinguished Most of the tolls on roads had been reduced or abolished; yet there were few provinces in which some such tolls were not still to be met with. Everywhere too Seigneurs levied dues on fairs and markets. Throughout France they had the exclusive right of sporting. Generally they alone could keep dovecotes and pigeons; landset verywhere the peasunt was compelled to grand at the seignorial mill, and to crush his grapes in the seignorial winepress. A very universal and onerous seignorial right was that of the fine called lods et ventes, paid to the lord every time lands were bought or sold within the boundaries of his manor. All over the country the land was burdened with quit-rents, rent-charges, or dues in money or in kind, due to the lord from the copyholder, and not redeemable by the latter. Under all these differences one common feature may be traced. All these rights were more or less connected with the soil or with its produce; they all bore upon him who cultivates it.

The spiritual lords of the soil enjoyed the same advantages; for the Church, which had a different origin, a different purpose, and a different nature from the feudal system, had nevertheless at last intimately mingled itself with that system; and though never completely incorporated with that foreign substance, it had struck

so deeply into it as to be incrusted there.2

Bislops, canons, and incumbents held fiefs or charges on the land in virtue of their ecclesiastical functions. A convent had generally the lordship of the village in which it stood. The Church held serfs in the only part of France in which they still existed: it levied its labour-rents, its due on fairs and markets; it had the common oven, the common mill, the common wine-press, and the common bull. Moreover, the clergy still enjoyed by France, as in all the rest of Christendom, the right of tithe.

But what I am here concerned to remark is, that throughout Europe at that time the same feudal rights—identically the same -c-visted, and that in most of the continental states they were far more onerous than in France. I may quote the single instance of the seignorial claim for labour: in France this right was unfrequent and mild: in Germann it was still universal and harsh.

quent and mind; in dermany it was still universal and harsh. Nay more, many of the rights of fendal origin which were held in the utmost abhorrence by the last generation of Frenchmen, and which they considered as contrary not only to justice but to civilisation—such as tithes, inalienable rent-charges or perpetural daes, fines or herots, and what were termed, in the somewhat pompous language of the eighteenth century, the secritude of the coll, might all be met with at that time, to a certain extent, in England, and many of them exist in England to this day. Yet they do not prevent the husbundry of England from being the most perfect and the most productive in the world, and the English people is scarcely conscious of their existence.

See Note X., Abuse of Feu lai Rights
 See Note XI. Feelestastical Fee dai Rights.
 See Note XII., Rights of the Abbey of Cherbourg.

How comes it then that these same feudal rights excited in the hearts of the people of France so intense a hatred that this passion has survived its object, and seems therefore to be unextinguishable? The cause of this phenomenon is, that, on the one hand, the French peasant had become an owner of the soil; and that, on the other, he had entirely escaped from the government of the great landlords. Many other causes might doubtless be indicated, but I believe these two to be the most important. If the peasant had not been an owner of the soil, he would have been insensible to many of the burdens which the feudal system had cast upon landed property. What matters tithe to a tenant farmer? He deducts it from his rent. What matters a rentcharge to a man who is not the owner of the ground? What matter even the impediments to free cultivation to a man who cultivates for another? On the other hand, if the French peasant had still lived under the administration of his landlord, these feudal rights would have appeared far less insupportable, because he would have regarded them as a natural consequence of the constitution of the country. When an aristocracy possesses not only privileges but powers, when it governs and administers the country, its private rights may be at once more extensive and less perceptible. In the feudal times, the nobility were regarded pretty much as the government is regarded in our own; the burdens they imposed were endured in consideration of the security they afforded. The nobles had many irksome privileges; they possessed many onerous rights; but they maintained public order, they administered justice, they caused the law to be executed, they came to the relief of the weak, they conducted the business of the community. In proportion as the nobility ceased to do these things, the burden of their privileges appeared more oppressive, and their existence became an anomaty.

D CHAP I

his own in this vast universe, fills him with pride and independence. But again these neighbours call him from his furrow, and compel him to come to work for them without wages. He tries to defend his young crops from their game—again they prevent him. As he crosses the river they wait for his passage to levy a toll. He finds them at the market, where they sell him the right of selling his own produce, and when, on his return home, he wants to use the remainder of his wheat for his own sustenance—of that wheat which was planted by his hands, and has grown under his eyes—he cannot touch it till he has ground it at the mill and baked it at the bakehouse of these same men. A portion of the income of his little property is paid away in quit rents to them also and these dues can neither be extinguished nor redeemed

Whatever he does these troublesome neighbours are everywhere on his pith, to disturb his happiness to interfere with his labour, to consume his profits, and when these are dismissed, others in the black garb of the Church present themselves to carry off the clearest profit of his harvest. Picture to yourself the condition the wants the character, the pissions of this min, and compute if you are able, the stores of hatred and of envy which are accumulated in his heart!

Teudalism still remained the greatest of all the civil institutions of France, though it had ceased to be a political institution. Reduced to these proportions the latred it excited was greater than ever, and it may be said with truth that the destruction of a part of the institutions of the Middle Ages rendered a hundred times mere odious that portion which still survived 2

See Note XIII Irr tat on caused to the Peasantry by Feudal R gbts, and especially by the Feudal R gbts of the Clergy

bee Note XIV Effect of Foudal
sm on state of Real Property

To any one who may cust a glance over the ancient administration of the kingdom, the first impression conveyed is that of a diversity of regulations and authorities, and the entangled complication of the different powers. France was covered with administrative bodies and distinct officers, who had no connection with one another, but who took part in the government in virtue of a right which they had purchased, and which could not be taken from them, but their duties were frequently so intermingled and so nearly contiguous as to prees and clash together within the range of the same transactions

The courts of justice took an indirect part in the legislative power, and possessed the right of framing administrative regulations which became obligatory within the limits of their own jurisdiction. Sometimes they munitained an opposition to the administration, properly so called, loudly blamed its mensures and procenbed its agents. Police ordinances were promulgated by simple justices in the towns and boroughs where they resided

The towns had a great diversity of constitutions, and their magistrates bore different designations—sometimes as mayors, sometimes as consuls, or again as syndics and derived their powers from different sources. Some were chosen by the king, others by the lord of the soil or by the prince holding the fiel, some again were elected for a year by their fellow-citizens, whilst others purchased the right of governing them permanently.

These different powers were the last remains of the ancient system, but something comparatively new or greatly modified had by degrees established itself among them, and this I have yet to describe.

to describe

In the centre of the langdom and close to the throne there had been gradually formed an administrative body of extriordinary authority, in the grasp of which every power was united after a new fashion this was the lang a Conneil. Its origin was afterent, but the greater part of its functions were of recent date. It was at once a supreme court of justice insamich as it had the right to quash the judgments of all the ordinary courts, and a superior administrative tribunal inastinch as every special jurisdiction was depend at on it in the last resort. It possessed moreover, as a Council of State, salject to the pleasure of the lang a legislative power, for it discussed and proposed the greater part of the laws, and fixed and assessed the taxes. As the superior administrative board it had to frame the general regulations which were to direct the agents of the Government. Within its walls all important affirms were deceded and all secondary powers controlled. I reri-thing finally came home to it; from that centre was derived the movement which set everything in motion. Yet it possessed no inherent jurisdiction of its own. The King alone decided, even when the Council appeared to advise, and even when it seemed to administer justice, it consisted of no more than simple 'givers of advice'-an expression used by the Parliament in one of its remonstrances.

30

This Council was not composed of men of rank, but of personages of middling or even low extraction, former Intendants or other men of that class thoroughly versed in the management of business, all of whom were liable to dismissal by the Crown. It generally proceeded in its course quietly and discreetly, displaying less pretension than real power; and thus it had but little lustre of its own, or, rather, it was lost in the splendour of the throne to which it stood so near; at once so powerful that everything came within its scope, and so obscure that it has scarcely been remarked by history.

As the whole administration of the country was directed by a single body, so nearly the entire management of home affairs was 'entrusted to the care of one single agent—the Comptroller-General. On opening an almanack of France before the Revolution, it will be found that each province had its special minister; but on studying the administration itself in the legal records of the time, it will soon be seen that the minister of the province had but few occasions of any importance for exercising his authority. common course of business was directed by the Comptroller-General, who gradually took upon himself all the affairs that had anything to do with money, that is to say, almost the whole public administration; and who thus performed successively the duties of minister of finance, minister of the interior, minister of public works, and minister of trade.

As, in truth, the central administration had but one agent in Paris, so it had likewise but a single agent in each province. Nobles were still to be found in the eighteenth century bearing the titles of governors of provinces; they were the ancient and often the hereditary representatives of feudal royalty. Honours were still bestowed upon them, but they no longer had any power. The Intendant was in possession of the whole reality of government.

This Intendant was a man of humble extraction, always a stranger to the province, and a young man who had his fortune to make. He never exercised his functions by any right of election, birth, or purchase of office; he was chosen by the government CHAP II

among the inferior members of the Council of State, and was always subject to dismissil He represented the body from which he was thus severed, and, for that reason, was called, in the administrative language of the time, a Detriched Commissioner All the powers which the Council itself possessed were accumulated in his hands, and he exercised them all in the first instance. Like the Council, he was at once administrator and judge He corresponded with all the ministers, and in the province was the sole agent of all the measures of the government

In each canton was placed below him an officer nominated by himself, and removable at will, called the Sub delegate The Intendant was very commonly a newly-created noble, the Sub-delegate was always a plebern He nevertheless represented the entire Government in the small, circumscribed space assigned to him as much as the Intendant did in the whole, and he was amenable to the Intendant as the Intendant was to the minister

The Marquis d Argenson relates in his 'Memoirs,' that one day Law said to him, "I never could have believed what I saw, when I was Comptroller of Finance Do you know that this kingdom of France is governed by thirty Intendants? You have neither parliament, nor estates, nor governors It is upon thirty Masters of Requests, despatched into the provinces, that their evil or their good, their fertility or their sterility, entirely depends

These powerful officers of the Government were, however, completely eclipsed by the remnants of the ancient aristocracy, and lost in the brilliancy which that body still shed around it So that, even in their own time, they were scarcely seen, although their finger was already on everything In society the nobles had over such men the advantages of rank, wealth and the consideration always attached to what is ancient. In the Government the nobility were immediately about the person of the Prince, and formed his Court, commanded the fleets, led the armies and, in short, did all that most attracts the observation of contemporaries, and too often absorbs the attention of posterity A man of high rank would have been insulted by the proposal to appoint him an Intendant The poorest man of family would generally have disdained the offer In his eves the Intendants were the representatives of an upstart power new men appointed to govern the middle classes and the peasantry, and, as for the rest, very sorry company Yet, as Law said, and as we shall see, these were the men who governed France

To commence with the right of taxation, which includes, as it were, all other rights It is well known a part of the taxes were farmed In these cases the King's Council negotiated with the financial companies, fixed the terms of the contract, and regulated the mode of collection. All the other taxes, such as the fault, the capitation tax, and the institutes were fixed and levied by the agents of the central administration or under their all-powerful control.

The Conneil, every year, by a secret decision, fixed the amount of the taile and its numerous accessories, and likewise its distribution among the provinces. The taille had thus increased from year, though public attention was nover called to the fact, no noise being made about it.

As the taitle was an ancient tax, its assessment and collection had been formerly confided to local agents, who were all, more or less, undependent of the Government by right of birth or election, or by purchase of office, they were the lords of the soil the purochial collectors, the treasurers of France, or officers termed the claw. These authorities still existed in the ughteenth century, but some had altogether ceased to busy themselves about the taille, whilst others only did so in a very secondary and entiroly subordinate manner. Even here the entire power was in the hands of the Intendant and his agents, he alone, in truth, assessed the taille, in the different purishes, directed and controlled the collectors, and grunted delays of payments or exemptions

As the other taxes such as the capitation tax, were of recent date, the Government was no longer emburrassed in respect to them by the remnants of former powers, but dealt with them without any intervention of the parties governed. The Comptroller General, the Intendant, and the Connel fixed the amount of each quota

Let us leave the question of money for that of men

It is sometimes a matter of astonishment how the French can have so patiently borne the yoke of the military conscription at the time of the Revolution and ever since, but it must be borne in mind that they had been already broken in to bear it for a long period of time. The conscription had been preceded by the militia, which was a hevier burden, although the amount of men required was less. From time to time the young men in the country were made to draw lots and from among them were taken a certain number of soldiers, who were formed into militia regiments, in which they served for six years.

As the milita was a comparatively modern institution none of the ancient feudal powers meddled with it, the whole business was intrusted to the agents of the Central Government alone. The Council fixed the general amount of men and the share of each province. The Intendant regulated the number of men to be raised in each purish; his Sub-delegate superintended the drawing of the lots, decided all cases of exemption, designated those militiamen who were allowed to remain with their families and those who were to join the regiment, and finally delivered over the latter to the military authorities. There was no appeal except to the Intendant or the Council.

It may be said with equal accuracy that, except in the pays d'état, all the public works, even those that had a very special destination, were decided upon and managed by the agents of the central power alone.

There certainly existed local and independent authorities, who, like the seigneur, the boards of finance, and the grands voyers (surveyors of public roads), had the power of taking a part in such matters of public administration. But all these ancient authorities, as may be seen by the slightest examination of the administrative documents of the time, bestirred themselves but.lnttle, or bestirred themselves no longer. All the great roads, and even the cross-roads leading from one town to another, were made and kept up at the cost of the public revenue. The Council decided the plan and contracted for its execution. The Intendant directed the engineering works, and the Sub-delegate got together the compulsory labourers who were to execute them. The care of the by-roads was alone left to the old local authorities, and they became impas-able.

As in our days, the body of the Ponts et Chaussées was the great agept of the Central Government in relation to public works, and, in spite of the difference of the times, a very remarkable resemblance is to be found in their constitution now and then. The administration of the Ponts et Chaussées had a council and a school, inspectors who annually travelled over the whole of France, and engineers who resided on the spot and who were appointed to direct the works under the orders of the Intendant. A far greater number of the institutions of the old monarchy than is commonly supposed lave been handed down to the modern state of French society, but in their transmission they have generally lost their names, even though they still preserve the same forms. As a rare exception, the Ponts et Chaussées have preserved both one and the other.

The Central Government alone undertook, with the help of its agents, to maintain public order in the provinces. The marichaussie, or mounted police, was dispersed in small detachments over the whole surface of the kingdom, and was everywhere placed under the control of the Intendents. It was by the help of these soldiers,

34 MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC ORDER BOOK II and, if necessary, of regular troops, that the Intendant warded of

and, it necessary, of regular troops, that the Intendant warded of any sudden danger, arrested vogabonds, repressed mendicity, and put down the roots, which were continually arising from the price of corn. It never happened, as had been formerly the case, that the subjects of the Crown were called upon to and the Government in this task, except indeed in the towns, where there was renembly

a town-guard, the soldiers of which were chosen and the officers appointed by the Intendent

of scarcity, it was he who caused corn or rice to be distributed among the people. The Conneil annually issued ordininess for the establishment of charitable-workshops (ateliers de charité) where the poorer among the persantry were enabled to find work at low wages, and the Conneil took upon itself to determine the places where these were necessary. It may be easily supposed, that alms thus bestowed from a distance were indiscriminate, capricious, and always very madequate.

The Central Government, moreover, did not confine itself to releving the peasantry in time of distress, it also undertook to teach them the art of enriching themselves, encouraged them in this task, and forced them to it, if necessary? For this purpose, from time to time, it caused distributions of small pamphlets upon the science of agriculture to be made by its Intendants and their Sub-delegates, founded schools of agriculture, offered prizes, and kept up, at a great expense, nursery-grounds, of which it distributed the produce. It would seem to have been more wise to have hightened the weight and modified the inequality of the burdens which then oppressed the agriculture of the country, but such an idea never seems to have occurred.

Sometimes the Council insisted upon compelling individuals to prosper, whether they would or no. The ordinances constraining artisans to use certain methods and manufacture certain articles are innumerable, and as the Intendruts had not time to superintend the application of all these regulations, there were inspectorspenered of manufactures, who visited in the provinces to insist on their fulfilment. Some of the arrits du Concell even prohibited the cultivation of certain crops which the Council did not consider proper for the purpose, whilst others ordered the destruction of such vines as had been, according to its opinion, planted in an unfavourable soil. So completely had the Government already changed its duty as a sovereign into that of a guardian

¹ See Note XV Public Relief and Note XVI ² See Note XVII , Powers of the Intendant for the Regulation of Trade ³

under no such fears The proof is that he restored these rights to all the towns which were rich enough to buy them buck again In reality, his object was not to abolish them, but to traffic in them. and if they were actually abolished, it was, without meaning it, by a mere fiscal expedient. The same thing was carried on for more than eighty years. Seven times within that period the Crown resold to the towns the right of electing their magistrates, and as soon as they had once more tasted this blessing, it was snatched away to be sold to them once more The motive of the measure was always the same, and frequently avowed Our financial necessities,' says the preamble to an edict of 1722, 'compel us to have recourse to the most effectual means of relieving them.' The mode was effectual, but it was ruinous to those who bore this stringe impost 'I am struck with the enormity of the sums which have been paid at all times to purchase back the municipal offices, writes an Intendant to the Comptroller-General in 1761 'The amount of these sums spent in useful improvements would have turned to the advantage of the town, which has, on the contrary, felt nothing but the weight of authority and the privi-legs of these offices' I have not detected a more shumeful feature in the whole aspect of the government of France before the Revo-Intion

It seems difficult to say with precision at the present time how the towns of I rinco were governed in the eighteenth century, for, besides that the origin of the municipal authorities fluctuated incessfully, as has just been stated each town still preserved some fregments of its former constitution and its peculiar customs. There were not, perhaps, two towns in France in which everything was exactly similar, but this apparent diversity is fallacious, and conceals a moral resemblance.

supposed, cersed every where to take an interest in the affairs of the town, and hved like strungers within their own walls. In vain the curic migristrates attempted from time to time to revice that civic patriotism which had done so many wonders in the Middle Ages. The people remained deaf. The greate t interests of the town no longer appeared to affect the citizens. They were asked to give their saffrages when the vain counterfut of a free election land been retuined, but they stood aloof. Actining is more frequent in history than such an occurrence. Almost all the princes who have destroyed freedom have attempted at first to preserve the forms of freedom, from Augustus to our own times, they flattered themselves that they should thus combine the moral strength which public assent always give, with the conveniences which absolute power can alone offer. But almost all of them have failed in this endeavour, and have soon discovered that it is impossible to prolong the offsee appearances where the reality has cereed to exist.

the e false appearances where the reality has cereed to exist. In the eighteenth century the municipal government of the towns of I'ruice had thus everywhere degenerated into a contracted oligarchy. A few families managed all the public business for their own private purposes, removed from the eve of the public, and with no public responsibility. Such was the morbid condition of this administration throughout the whole of I'rance. All the Intendants pointed it out, but the only remedy they suggested was the increased subjection of the local authorities to the Central Government.

In this respect, however, it was difficult for success to be more complete. Besides the Royal edicts, which from time to time modified the administration of all the towns in Frunce, the local by-laws of each town were frequently overruled by Orders in Council, which were not registered—passed on the recommendation of the Intendants without any previous inquiry, and sometimes without the citizens of the towns themselves knowing anything of the matter ¹ to plans and estimates approved by the Council These worls were adjudged to contractors before the Intendant or his Sub-delegates, and were generally intrusted to the engineers or architects of the State

These fiets will doubtless excite the surprise of those who suppose that the whole present condition of I rance is a novelty.

But the Central Government interfered more directly in the numerical administration of the towns than even these rules would seem to indicate, its power was far more extended than its right to evereise it

I meet with the following passage in a circular instruction, addressed about the middle of the last century by a Comptroller-General to all the Intendants of the Kingdom 'You will pay purticular attention to all that takes place in the municipal assemblies. You will take care to have a most exact report of everything done there and of all the resolutions taken, in order to trunsmit them to me forthwith, accompanied with your own opinion on the subject.

In fact it may be seen from the correspondence of the Intendant with his subordinate officers that the Government had a finger in all the concerns of every town the least as well as the greatest. The Government was always consulted—the Government had always a decided opinion on every point. It even regulated the public festivities, ordered public rejocings, caused salutes to be fired and houses to be illuminated. On one occasion I observe that a member of the burgher guard was fined twenty livres by the Intendant for having absented himself from a Te Deum.

The officers of these municipal corporations had therefore arrived at a becoming sense of their own insignificance. 'We most humbly supplicate you Monseigneur (each was the style in which they addressed the Kings Intendant) to grant us your good will and protection. We will endeavour not to show ourselves inworthy of them by the submission we are ready to show to all the commands of your Greatness. 'We have never resisted your will Monseigneur, was the language of another body of these persons who still assumed the pompous title of Peers of the City.

Such was the preparation of the middle classes for government and of the people for liberty

If at least this close dependence of the towns on the State In I preserved their finances' but such was not the case. It is some times argued that without centralisation the towns would run themselves. I know not how that may be but'l know that in the embarrassments. If we turn from the towns to the villages, we meet with different powers and different forms of government, but the same dependence.1

-3:

in the powerful hand of the State, the rural pairshes of France assumed the form I am about to describe

In the eighteenth century the number and the name of the parochial officers varied in the different provinces of Trance The ancient records show that these officers were more numerous when local life was more active, and that they diminished in number as that life declined In most of the purishes they were, in the eighteenth century, reduced to two persons-the one named the 'Collector,' the other most commonly named the 'Syndic' Generally, these parochial officers were either elected, or supposed to be so, but they had everywhere become the instruments of the State rather than the representatives of the community The Collector levied the taille, under the direct orders of the Intendant The Syndic, placed under the daily direction of the Sub-delegate of the Intendant, represented that personage in all matters relating to public order or affecting the Government He became the principal agent of the Government in relation to mulitary service, to the public works of the State, and to the execution of the general laws of the kingdom

The Seigneur, as we have already seen, stood alost from all these details of government, he had even ceased to superrithend them, or to assist in them, nay more, these duties, which had served in earlier times to keep up his power, appeared unworthy of his attention in proportion to the progressive decay of that power. It would at last have been an offence to his pride to require him to attend to them. He had ceased to govern, but his presence in the parish and his privileges effectually prevented any good government from being established in the parish in place of his own. A private person differing so entirely from the other purishioners—so independent of them, and so favoured by the laws—weakened or destroyed the authority of all rules.

The unavoidable contact with such a person in the country had driven into the towns, as I shall subsequently have occasion to show, almost all those inhabitants who had either a competency or education, so that none remained about the Segneur but a flock of ignorint and uncultivated peasints, incapable of managing the administration of their common interests. 'A parish,' as Turgot had justly observed, 'is an assemblage of cabins, and of inhabitints as passive as the cabins they dwell in'.

The adjusting the common interests of the cabins are set of the cabins and the cabins are set of the cabins and the cabins are set of the cabins and the cabins are cabled to the cabins and the cabins are cabled to the cabins are cabins and the cabins are cabled to the cabins are cabled to the cabins are cabled to the cabins are called the called the

The administrative records of the eighteenth century are full of complaints of the measurety, indolence, and ignorance of the prochain collectors and synders Ministers, Intendants, Sub-delegates, and even the country gentlemen, are for ever deploring these defects; but none of them had traced these defects to their

CHAP III.

Down to the Revolution the rural parishes of France had preserved in their government something of that democratic aspect which they had acquired in the Middle Ages. If the parachial officers were to be elected, or some matter of public interest to be discussed, the village bell summoned the peasants to the church-porch, where the poor as well as the rich were entitled to present themselves. In these meetings there was not indeed any regular debate or any decisive mode of voting, but every one was at liberty to speak his mind; and it was the duty of the notary, sent for on purpose, and operating in the open air, to collect these different opinions and enter them in a record of the proceedings.

When these empty semblances of freedom are compared with the total impotence which was connected with them, they afford an example, in miniature, of the combination of the most absolute government with some of the forms of extreme democracy; so that to oppression may be added the absurdity of affecting to disguise it. This democratic assembly of the parish could indeed express its desires, but it had no more power to execute its will than the corporate bodies in the towns. It could not speak until its mouth had been opened, for the meeting could not be held without the express permission of the Intendant, and, to use the expression of those times, which adapted their language to the fact, 'under his good pleasure' Even if such a meeting were unanimous, it could neither levy a rate, nor sell, nor buy, nor let, nor sue, without the permission of the King's Council It was necessary to obtain a minute of Council to repair the damage caused by the wind to the church steeple, or to rebuild the falling gables of the parsonage. The rural parishes most remote from Paris were just as much subject to this rule as those nearest to the capital I have found records of parochial memorials to the Council for leave to spend twenty-five livres.

the Sub-delegate, bent them to every caprice. Often they were fined, sometimes imprisoned; for the scenrities which elsewhere defended the citizens against arbitrary proceedings had consed to evist for them: 'I have thrown into prison,' said an Intendant in 1750, 'some of the chief persons in the villages who grumbled, and I have made these parishes pay the expense of the lorishmen of the patiol. By these means they have been easily checkmated.' The consequence was, that these parochial functions were not considered as honours, but as burdens to be evaded by every species of subterfuge.

Yet these last remnants of the ancient parochial government were still dear to the peasantry of France; and even at the present day, of all public laterites the only one they thoroughly comprehend is parochial freedom. The only business of a public nature which really interests them is to be found there. Men, who readily leave the government of the whole nation in the hand of a master, revolt at the notion of not being able to speak their mind in the administration of their own village. So much weight is there yet in forms the most hollow.

What has been said of the towns and parishes of Trance may be extended to almost all the corporate bodies which had any separate existence and collective property.

Under the social condition of Trance anterior to the Revolution of 1789, as well as at the present day, there was no city, town, borough, village, or hamlet in the kingdom—there was neither hospital, church fabric, religious house, nor college, which could have an independent will in the management of its private affairs, or which could administer its own property according to its own choice. Then, as now, the executive administration therefore held the whole Trench people in tutelage; and if that insolent term had not yet been invented, the thing itself already existed.

CHAPTER IV.

ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION AND THE IMMUNITY OF FUBLIC OFFI-CERS ARE INSTITUTIONS OF FRANCE ANTERIOR TO THE REVOLU-TION.¹

In no country in Europe were the ordinary courts of justice less dependent on the Government than in France; but in no country were extraordinary courts of justice more extensively employed. These two circumstances were more nearly connected than might be imagined. As the King was almost entirely powerless in relation to the judges of the land-as he could neither dismiss them, nor translate them, nor even, for the most part, promote them-as, in short, he held them neither by ambition nor by fear, their independence soon proved embarrassing to the Crown. The result had been, in France, more than anywhere else, to withdraw from their jurisdiction the suits in which the authority of the Crown was directly interested, and to call into being, as it were beside them, a species of tribanal more dependent on the sovereign, which should present to the subjects of the Crown some semblance of justice without any real cause for the Crown to dread its control

In other countries, as, for instance, in some parts of Germany, where the ordinary courts of justice had never been as independent of the Government as those of France, no such precautions, were taken, and no administrative justice (as it was termed) existed. The sovereign was so far master of the judges, that he needed no special commissions.

Y [Que la justice administrature is gravate de frontienaires and des institutions de l'Ancee Régime. The difficulty of rendering these terms into intelliphile English arises from the fact that at no time in the last two centures of the history of England has the executive administration assumed a peculiar jurisliction to itself or removed it soldiers from the jurisliction of the courts of oforman law, in this country. It will be seen in this chapter that the ordinary jursalictions of France have always been liable to be superseded by extraordinary judicial authonites when the interests of the Government or the responsibility of its agents were at stake. The arbitary jursaliction of all such irregular iribunals was, to the control of the control of the court of Star Chamber and the High Commission.] The edicts and declarations of the Kings of France, published in the last century of the monarchy, and the Orders in Council promiligated within the same period, almost all provided on behalf of the Government that the differences which any given measure might occasion and the litigation which might ensue, should be exclusively heard before the Intendants and before the Council 'It is moreover ordered by his Majesty, that all the disputes which may arise upon the execution of this order, with all the circumstances and incidents thereunto belonging, shall be carried before the Intendant to be judged by him, saving an appeal to the Council and all courts of justice and tribunals are forbidden to tale cognisance of the same' Such was the ordinary form of these decrees

In matters which fell under laws or customs of an earlier date, when this precaution had not been til en the Council continually intervened, by way of what was termed elocation, or the calling up to its own superior jurisdiction from the hands of the ordinary officers of justice suits in which the administration of the State had an interest. The registers of the Council are full of minutes of erocation of this nature By degrees the exception became the rule and a theory was invented to justify the fact 1 It came to be regarded as a maxim of state, not in the laws of France, but in the minds of those by whom those laws were applied that all suits in which a public interest was involved or which arose out of the construction to be put on any act of the administration were not within the competency of the ordinary judges whose only business it was to decide between private interests. On this point we in more recent times have only added a mode of expression, the idea had preceded the Revolution of 1789

Already at that time most of the disputed questions which rose out of the collection of the revenue were held to fall under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Intendant and the Kings Conneil? So too, with reference to the regulation of public waggons and stage coaches, drunge the navigation of rivers, etc., and in general all the suits in which the public authorities were interested came to be disposed of by administrative tribunals only. The Intendants took the greatest care that this exceptional jurisdiction should be continually extended. They urged on the Comptroller General, and stimulated the Council The reison one of these officers assigned to induce the Council to call up one of these suits deserves to be remembered. "An ordinary judge, said he, "is sulject to fixed rules, which comped him to punish any transgres sion of the law; but the Council can always set aside rules for a useful purpose.

On this principle, it often happened that the Intendant or the Council called up to their own jurisdiction suits which had an almost imperceptible connection with any subject of administrative interest, or even which had no porceptible connection with such questions at all. A country gentleman quarrels with his neighbour, and being dissatisfied with the apparent disposition of his judges, he asks the Council to etoke his cause. The Intendant reports that, 'although this is a case solely affecting private rights, which full under the cognisance of the courts of justice, yet that his Majesty can always, when he pleases, reserve to himself the decision of any suit whatever, without rendering any account at all of his motives.'

It was generally before the Intendant or before the Provost of the Maréchausée that all the lower order of people were sent for trial, by this process of evocation, when they had been guilty of public disturbances. Most of the riots so frequently caused by the high price of corn gave rise to transfers of jurisdiction of this nature. The Intendant then summoned to his court a certain number of persons, who formed a sort of local council, chosen by himself, and with their assistance he proceeded to try criminals. I have found sentences delivered in this manner, by which men were condemmed to the galleys, and even to death. Criminal trials decided by the Intendant were still common at the close of the seventeenth century.

Modern jurists in discussing this subject of administrative jurisdictions assert, that great progress has been made since the 'Before that era,' they say, 'the judicial and administrative powers were confounded; they have since been distinguished and assigned to their respective places' To appreciate correctly the progress here spoken of, it must never be forgotten, that if on the one hand the judicial power under the old monarchy was incessantly extending beyond the natural sphere of its authority. vet on the other hand that sphere was never entirely filled by it. To see one of these facts without the other is to form an incomplete and inaccurate idea of the subject. Sometimes the courts of law were allowed to enact regulations on matters of public administration, which was manifestly beyond their jurisdiction, sometimes they were restrained from judging regular suits, which was to exclude them from the exercise of their proper functions The modern law of France has undoubtedly removed the administration of justice from those political institutions into which it had very improperly been allowed to penetrate before the Revolution; but at the same time, as has just been shown, the Government continually invaded the proper sphere of the judicial authorities, and this state of things is unchanged, as if the confusion of these powers were not equally dangerous on the one side as on the other, and even worse in the latter mode; for the intervention of a judicial authority in administrative business is only injurious to the transaction of affairs; but the intervention of administrative power in judicial proceedings depraces mankind, and tends to render men in once revolutionary and service.

Amongst the nine or ten constitutions which have been established in perpetuity in France within the last sixty years, there is one in which it was expressly provided that no agent of the administration can be prosecuted before the ordinary courts of law without having previously obtained the assent of the Government to such a prosecution. This clause appeared to be so well devised that when the constitution to which it belonged was destroyed, this provision was saved from the wreck, and it has ever since been carefully preserved from the injuries of revolutions The administrative body still calls the privilege secured to them by this article one of the great conquests of 1789; but in this they are mistaken, for under the old monarchy the Government was not less solicitous than it is in our own times to spare its officers the unpleasantness of rendering an account in a court of law, like any other private citizens The only essential difference between the two periods is this: before the Revolution the Government could only shelter its agents by having recourse to illegal and arbitrary measures; since the Revolution it can legally allow them to violate the laws

When the ordinary tribunals of the old monarchy allowed proceedings to be instituted against any officer representing the central authority of the Government, an Order in Council usually intervened to withdraw the accused person from the jurisdiction of an judges, and to arraign him before commissioners named by the Council; for, as was said by a councillor of state of that time, a public officer thus attacked would have had to encounter an adverse prepossession in the minds of the ordinary judges, and the authority of the King would have been compromised. This sort of interference occurred not only at long intervals, but every day

ministers, could only be proscuted for their conduct in the discharge of their functions, in virtue of a decision of the Council of State |

¹ The article referred to is the 75th article of the Constitution de l'An VIII, which provided that the agents of the executive government, other than the

—not only with reference to the chief agents of the Government, but to the least. The slightest thread of a connection with the administration sufficed to relieve an officer from all other control. A mounted overseer of the Board of Public Works, whose business was to direct the forced labour of the peasantry, was prosecuted by a peasant whom he had ill-treated. The Council evoked the cause, and the chief engineer of the district, writing confidentially to the Intendant, said on this subject: 'It is quite true that the overseer is greatly to blame, but that is not a reason for allowing the case to follow the ordinary jurisdiction; for it is of the utmost importance to the Board of Works that the courts of common law should not hear or decide on the complaints of the peasants engaged in forced labour against the overseers of these works. If this precedent were followed, those works would be disturbed by continual litigation, arising out of the animosity of the public against the officers of the Government.'

On another occasion the Intendant himself wrote to the Comptroller-General with reference to a Government contractor, who had taken his materials in a 'field which did not belong to him. 'I cannot sufficiently represent to you how injurious it would be to the interests of the Administration if the contractors were abandoned to the jurisdiction of the ordnary courts, whose principles can never be reconciled to those of the Government.'

These lines were written precisely a hundred years ago, but it

These lines were written precisely a hundred years ago, but it appears as if the administrators who wrote them were our own contemporaries.

CHAPTER V.

SHOWING HOW CENTRALISATION HAD BEEN ABLE TO INTRODUCE TISLLY AMONG THE ANCHINE INSTITUTIONS OF FRANCE, AND TO SUPPLANT WITHOUT DESTROYING THEM.

Ler us now briefly recapitulate what has been said in the three preceding chapters. A single body or institution placed in the centre of the kingdom regulated the public administration of the whole country; the same Minister directed almost all the internal affairs of the kingdom; in each province a single Government agent managed all the details; no secondary administrative bodies existed, and none which could act until they had been set in motion by the authority of the State: courts of extraordinary jurisdiction judged the causes in which the administration was interested, and sheltered all its agents. What is this but the centralisation with which we are so well acquainted? Its forms were less marked than they are at present; its course was less regular, its existence more disturbed; but it is the same being-It has not been necessary to add or to withdraw any essential condition; the removal of all that once surrounded it at once exposed it in the shape that now meets our eyes.

Most of the institutions which I have just described have been imitated subsequently, and in a hundred different places; but they were at that time peculiar to I rance; and we shall shortly see how great was the influence they had on the I rench Revolution and on its results

• But how came these institutions of modern date to be established in Prance amidst the ruins of feudal society?

It was a work of patience, of address, and of time, rather than of force or of absolute power. At the time when the Revolution occurred, scarcely any part of the old administrative edifice of Irance had been destroyed; but another structure had been, as it were, called into existence beneath it

There is nothing to show that the Government of the old Ric Note AXIV, Traces in Canada of Centralisation of the old French Monardly. I rench monarchy followed any deliberately concerted plan to effect this difficult operation. That Government merely obeyed the instinct which leads all governments to aim at the exclusive management of affairs—an instinct which ever remained the same in spite of the diversity of its agents. The monarchy had left to the ancient powers of I rance their venerable names and their honours, but it had gradually subtracted from them their authority. They had not been expelled but enticed out of their domains. By the indolence of one man, by the egotism of another, the Government had found means to occupy their places. Availing itself of all their vices, never attempting to correct but only to supersede them, the Government at last found means to substitute for almost all of them its own sole agent, the Intendant, whose very name was unknown when those powers which he supplanted came into being.

The judicial institutions had alone impeded the Government in this great enterprise; but even there the State had seized the substance of power, leaving only the shadow of it to its adversaries. The Parliaments of France had not been excluded from the sphere of the administration, but the Government had extended itself gradually in that direction so as to appropriate almost the whole of it. In certain extraordinary and transient emergencies, in times of scarcity, for instance, when the passions of the people lent a support to the ambition of the magistrates, the Central Government allowed the Parliaments to administer for a brief interval, and to leave a trace upon the page of history; but the Government soon silently resumed its place, and gently extended its grasp over every class of men and of affairs.

In the struggles between the French Parliaments and the authority of the Crown, it will be seen on attentive observation that these encounters almost always took place on the field of politics, properly so called, rather than on that of administration. These quarrels generally arose from the introduction of a new tax; that is to say, it was not administrative power which these rial authorities disputed, but legislative power to which the one had as little rightful claim as the other.

This became more and more the case as the Revolution approached. As the passions of the people began to take first the Parliaments assumed a more active part in politics; and as at the same time the central power and its agents were becoming more expert and more adroit, the Parliaments tools a less active part in the administration of the country. They acquired every day less of the administrator and more of the tribune.

52

The course of events, moreover, incessintly opens new fields of action to the executive Government, where judicial bodies have no aptitude to follow, for these are new transactions not governed by precedent, and alien to judicial routine The great progress of society continually gives birth to new wants, and each of these wants is a fresh source of power to the Government, which is alone able to satisfy them Whilst the sphere of the administration of justice by the courts of law remains unaltered, that of the executive Government is variable and constantly expands with civilisation ıtself 1 The Revolution which was approaching, and which had already begun to agitate the mind of the whole French people, suggested to them a multitude of new ideas, which the central power of the Government could alone realise The Revolution developed that power before it overthrew it, and the agents of the Government underwent the same process of improvement as everything else This fact becomes singularly apparent from the study of the old administrative archives The Comptroller-General and the Intendant of 1780 no longer resemble the Comptroller-General and the Intendant of 1740, the administration was already transformed the agents were the same, but they were impelled by a different spirit In proportion as it became more minute and more comprehensive, it also became more regular and more scientific. It became more temperate as its ascendency became universal, it oppressed less, it directed more

The first outbreak of the Revolution destroyed this grand institution of the monarchy, but it was restored in 1800 It was not, as his so often been said, the principles of 1789 which triumphed at that time and ever since in the public administration of France, but, on the contrary, the principles of the administration anterior to the Revolution, which then resumed their authority and have since retained it

If I am asked how this fragment of the state of society anterior to the Revolution could thus be transplanted in its entirety, and incorporated into the new state of society which had sprung up, I answer that if the principle of centralisation did not perish in the Revolution, it was because that principle was itself the precursor and the commencement of the Revolution, and I add that when a people has destroyed Aristocracy in its social constitution that people is sliding by its own weight into centralisation less exertion is then required to drive it down that declivity than to hold it back. Amongst such a peor le all powers tend naturally see Note NAV , I sample of the Intervention of the Council.

CHAP. V.

to unity, and it is only by great ingenuity that they can still be kept separate. The democratic Revolution which destroyed so many of the institutions of the French monarchy, served therefore to consolidate the centralised administration, and centralisation seemed so naturally to find its place in the society which the Revolution had formed that it might easily be taken for its offspring.

CHAPTER VI.

THE ADMINISTRATIVE HABITS OF FRANCE BEFORE THE REVOLUTION.

It is impossible to read the letters addressed by an Intendant of one of the provinces of l'rance, under the old monarchy, to his superiors and his subordinates, without admiring the similitude engendered by similar institutions between the administrators of those times and the administrators of our own. They seem to join hands across the abyes of the Revolution which lies between them. The same may be said of the people they govern. The power of legislation over the minds of men was never more distinctly visible.

The Ministers of the Crown had already conceived the design of taking actual cognisance of every detail of business and of regulating everything by their own authority from Paris. As time advanced and the administration became more perfect, this passion increased Towards the end of the eighteenth century not a charitable workshop could be established in a distant province of France until the Comptroller-General himself had fixed the cost, drawn up the scheme, and chosen the site. If a poor-house was to be coult the Minister must be informed of the names of the beggars who frequent it-when they arrive-when they depart. As early as the middle of the same century (in 1733) M. d'Argenson wrote-·The details of business thrown upon the Ministers are immense. Nothing is done without them, nothing except by them, and if their information is not as extensive as their powers, they are obliged to leave everything to be done by clerks, who become in reality the masters'

The Comptroller-General not only called for reports on matters of business, but even for minute particulars relating to individuals To procure these particulars the Intendant applied in his turn to his Sub-delegates, and of course repeated precisely what they told hum, just as if he had himself been thoroughly acquainted with the subject.

In order to direct everything from Paris and to know everything there, it was necessary to invent a thousand checks and means of control The mass of paper documents was already enormon-, and such was the tedious slowness of these administrative proceeding, that I have remarked it always took at least a year before a parish could obtain leave to repair a steeple or to rebuild a parsonage more frequently two or three years elap ed before the demand was granted

CHAP VI

REPORTS TO THE COUNCIL

The Council itself remarked in one of its minutes Olarch 29. 1773) that 'the administrative formalities lead to infinite delays, and too frequently excite very well grounded complaints, these formalities are, however, all necessary, added the Council

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICERS BOOK II.

the sum thus offered by them was sufficient, the Comptroller-General wrote on the margin of the list of contributions, 'Good; express satisfaction;' but if the sum was considerable, he wrote, 'Good; express satisfaction and sensibility.'

ភ័ត

The administrative functionaries, nearly all belonging to the middle ranks, already formed a class imbued with a spirit peculiar to itself, and possessing traditions, virtues, an honour and a pride of its own. This was, in fact, the aristocracy of the new order of society, completely formed and ready to start into life; it only waited until the Revolution had made room for it. The administration of France was already characterised by the violent hatred which it entertained indiscriminately towards all those not within its own pale, whether belonging to the nobility or to the middle classes, who attempted to take any part in public affairs The smallest independent body, which seemed likely to be formed without its intervention, caused alarm: the smallest voluntary association, whatever was its object, was considered troublesome; and none were suffered to exist but those which it composed in an arbitrary manner, and over which it presided. Even the great industrial companies found little favour in the eyes of the administration; in a word, it did not choose that the citizens should take any concern whatever in the examination of their own affairs, and preferred sterility to competition. But, as it has always been necessary to allow the French people the indulgence of a little heence to console them for their servitude, the Government suffered them to discuss with great freedom all sorts of general and abstract theories of religion, philosophy, morals, and even politics. It was ready enough to allow the fundamental principles upon which society then rested to be attacked, and the existence of God himself to be discussed, provided no comments were made upon the very least of its own agents. Such speculations were supposed to be altogether irrelevant to the State.

that journal interesting, and to ensure to it a superiority over all others. In consequence whereof, adds the Minister, 'you will take care to send me a bulletin of everything that happens in your district likely to engage the curiosity of the public, more especially whatever relates to physical science, natural history, or remarkable and interesting occurrences.' This circular is accompanied by a prospectus setting forth that the new Gazette, though appearing oftener and containing more matter than the journal which it supersedes, will cost the subscribers much less.

Sab-delegates and set them to work; but at first they replied that they knew nothing. This called forth a second letter from the Minister, complaining bitterly of the sterility of the province as to 'His Majesty commands me to tell you that it is his intention that you should pay very serious attention to this matter, and that you should give the most precise order to your agents.' Hereupon the Sub-delegates undertake the task. One of them reported that a smuggler of salt had been hung, and had displayed great courage; another that a woman in his district had been delivered of three girls at a birth; a third that a dreadful storm had occurred, though without doing any mischief. One of them declared that in spite of all his efforts he had been unable to discover anything worth recording, but that he would subscribe himself to so useful a journal, and would exhort all respectable persons to follow his example. All these efforts seem, however, to have produced but little effect, for a fresh letter informs us that 'the King, who has the goodness,' as the Minister says, 'himself to enter into the whole detail of the measures for perfecting the Gazette, and who wishes to give to this journal the superiority and celebrity it deserves, has testified much dissatisfaction on seeing his views so ill carried out '

History is a picture gallery, containing few originals and a

It must be admitted, however, that in France the Central Government never imitated those Governments of the South of Europe which seem to have taken possession of everything only in order to render everything barren. The French Government frequently showed great intelligence as to its functions, and always displayed produgious activity. But its activity was often unproductive and even mischievous, because at times it endeavoured toalighting which was beyond its power, or that which no one could control.

It rarely attempted, or quickly abandoned, the most necessary in this passage rigid rules and lax practice were its characteristics

Any one who should attempt to judge the Government of that period by the collection of its laws would fill into the most absurd mustakes. Under the date 1757 I have found a royal declaration condemning to death any one who shall compose or print writings contrary to religion or established order. The book-eller who sells and the pedlar who lawks them are to suffer the same punishment. Was thus in the age of St. Dominic? It was under the supremacy of Voltaire.

It is a common subject of complaint against the French that they deepise law, but when, alas' could they have learned to respect it? It may be truly said that amongst the men of the period I am describing, the place which should be filled in the human mind by the notion of law was empty. Every pertinementerated that the e tablished order of things should be set aside in his favour with as much vehemence and authority as if he were demanding that it should be properly enforced, and indeed its authority was never alleged against him but as a means of getting rid of his importunity. The submission of the people to the existing powers was still complete, but their obedience was the effect of custom rather than of will, and when by chance they were stirred up, the slightest excitement led at once to violence, which again was almost always represeed by counter-violence and arbitrary power, not by the law

In the eighteenth century the central authority in France had not yet acquired that sound and vigorous constitution which it has since exhibited, nevertheless, as it had already succeeded in destroying all intermediate authorities, and had left only a vast blank between itself and the individuals constituting the nation, it already appeared to each of them from a distance as the only spring of the social machine, the sole and indispensable agent of public life.

unlimited as its rights, all that was required was to force it to make a proper use of both The elder Mirabeau, a nobleman so imbued with the notion of the rights of his order that he openly called the Intendants 'intruders,' and declared that if the appointment of the magistrates was left altogether in the hands of the Government, the courts of justice would soon be mere bands of commissioners,'-Mirabeau himself looked only to the action of the central authority to realise his visionary schemes

These ideas were not confined to books, they found entrance into men's minds, modified their customs, affected their habits, and

penetrated throughout society, even into every-day life

No one imagined that any important affair could be properly carried out without the intervention of the State agriculturists-a class usually refrictory to precept-were dis posed to think that if agriculture did not improve, it was the fault of the Government, which did not give them sufficient advice and assistance One of them writes to an Intendant in a tone of irritation which foreshadows the coming Revolution the Government appoint inspectors to go once a year into the provinces to examine the state of cultivation, to instruct the cultivators how to improve it-to tell them what to do with their cattle, how to fatten, rear, and sell them, and where to take them to market? These inspectors should be well paid, and the farmers who exhibited proofs of the best system of husbandry should receive some mark of honour'

Agricultural inspectors and crosses of honour! Such means of encouraging agriculture never would have entered into the head of a Suffoll farmer

In the eyes of the majority of the French the Government was alone able to ensure public order, the people were afraid of nothing but the patrols and men of property had no confidence in anything else Both classes regarded the gendarme on his rounds not merely as the chief defender of order, but as order itself 'No one, says the provincial assembly of Gayenne can fail to observe that the sight of a patrol is well calculated to restrain those most hostile to all subordination Accordingly every one wanted to have a squadron of them at his own door The archives of an intendancy are full of requests of this nature no one seemed to suspect that under the guise of a protector a master might be concealed 1

Nothing struck the emigres so much on their arrival in Ing and as the absence of this military force It filled them with surprise, and often even with contempt, for the Diglish

See Note XXVI Ad littorial Patrols.

them, a man of ability, but whose education had not prepared him for what he was to see, wrote as follows:—'It is perfectly true that an Englishman congratulates himself on having been robbed, on the score that at any rate there is no patrol in his country. A man may lament anything that disturbs public tranquillity, but he will nevertheless comfort himself, when he sees the turbulent restored to society, with the reflection that the letter of the law is stronger than all other considerations. Such false notions, however,' he adds, 'are not absolutely universal; there are some wise people who think otherwise, and wisdom must prevail in the end.'
But that these eccentricities of the English could have any connection with their liberties never entered into the mind of this observer. He chose rather to explain the phenomenon by more scientific reasons. 'In a country,' said he, 'where the moisture of the climate, and the want of elasticity in the air, give a sombre tinge to the temperament, the people are disposed to give themselves up to serious objects. The English people are naturally inclined to occupy themselves with the affairs of government, to which the French are averse.'

The French Government having thus assumed the place of Providence, it was natural that every one should invoke its aid in its individual necessities. Accordingly we find an immense number of petitions which, while affecting to relate to the public interest, really concern only small individual interests. The boxes containing them are perhaps the only place in which all the classes composing that society of France, which has long ceased to exist, are still mingled. It is a melancholy task to read them: we find peasants praying to be indemnified for the loss of their cattle or their horses; wealthy landowners asking for assistance in rendering their estates more productive, manufacturers soliciting from the Intendant privileges by which they may be protected from a troublesome competition, and very frequently confiding the embarriassed state of their affairs to him, and begging him to obtain for them relief or a loan from the Comptroller-General. It appears 4hat some fund was set apart for this purpose

Even the nobles were often very importunate solicitants; the only mark of their condition is the lofty tone in which they begged. The tax of twentieths was to many of them the principal link in the chain of their dependence. Their quota of this tax was fixed every year by the Council upon the report of the Intendant, and to him they addressed themselves in order to obtain delays and remissions. I have read a host of petitions of this nature made by nobles, nearly all men of title, and often of very high rank, in consideration, as they stated, of the insufficiency of their revenues, or the disordered state of their affairs. The nobles usually addressed the Intendant as 'Monsieur;' but I have observed that, under these circumstances, they invariably called him 'Monseigneur, as was usually done by men of the middle class. times pride and poverty were drolly mixed in these petitions. One of the nobles wrote to the Intendant: 'Your feeling heart will never consent to see the father of a family of my rank strictly taxed by twentieths like a father of the lower class s.'

¹ See Note XXVII., Bureaux do Tabac 2 [It was a specks of income tax of five per cent, levied on a portion of the income]

the Intendant, and appeared to expect to be fed by him alone. It is true that every man already blamed the Government for all his sufferings. The most inevitable privations were ascribed to it, and even the inclemency of the seasons was made a subject of reproach to it. We need not be astonished at the marvellous facility with which centralisation was re-established in France at the beginning of this century.1 The men of 1789 had overthrown the edifice. but its foundations remained deep in the very minds of the destroyers, and on these foundations it was easy to build it up anew. and to make it more stable than it had ever been before.

At the periods of scarcity, which were so frequent during the eighteenth century, the whole population of each district looked to

1 See Note XXVIII , Extinction of Loyal Activity

CHAP TH

CHAPTER VII

OF ALL EUROPEAN NATIONS FRANCE WAS ALREADY THAT IN WHICH THE MFTROPOLIS HAD ACQUIPED THE GREATEST PREPONDERANCE OVER THE PROVINCES, AND HAD MOST COMPLETELY ADSORBED THE MHOLE PARIES.

THE political preponderance of capital cities over the rest of the empire is caused neither by their situation, their size, nor their wealth, but by the nature of the government London, which contains the population of a kingdom, has never hitherto exercised a sovereign influence over the destinies of Great Britain No citizen of the United States ever imagined that the inhabitants of New York could decide the fite of the American Union Nav more, no one even in the State of New York conceives that the will of that city alone could direct the affairs of the nation | Yet New York at this moment numbers as many inhabitants as Paris centained when the Revolution broke out

The reader who has followed the preceding chapters attentively already knows the causes of this phenomenon; it would be a needless tax on his patience to enumerate them afresh in this phace.

This revolution did not altogether escape the attention of the Government, but chiefly by its physical effect on the growth of the city. The Government saw the daily extension of Paris and was afraid that it would become difficult to administer so large a city praperly. A great number of ordinances issued by the Kings of Traffee, chiefly during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, were destined to put a stop to the growth of the capital. These sovereigns were concentrating the whole public life of France more and more in Paris or at its gates, and yet they wanted Paris to remain a small city. The crection of new houses was forbidden, or else commands were issued that they should be built in the most costly manner and in unattractive situations which were fixed upon beforehand. Every one of these ordinances, it is true, declares, that in spite of all preceding edicts Paris had continued to spread. Six times during the course of his reign did Louis XIV., in the height of his power, in vain attempt to check the increase of Paris; the city grew continually in spite of all edicts. Its political and social preponderance increased even faster than its walls, not so much owing to what took place within them as to the events passing without.

During this period all local liberties gradually became extinct, the symptoms of independent vitality disappeared. The distinctive features of the various provinces became confused, and the last traces of the ancient public life were effaced. Not that the nation was falling into a state of languor; on the contrary, activity everywhere prevailed, but the motive punciple was no longer anywhere but in Paris. I will cite but one example of this from amonest a thousand In the reports made to the Minister on the condition of the bookselling trade, I find that in the sixteenth century and at the beginning of the seventeenth, many considerable printing offices existed in provincial towns which are now without printers, or where the printers are without work. Yet there can be no doubt that many more literary productions of all kinds were published at the end of the eighteenth century than during the sixteenth; but all mental activity now emanated from the centre alone, Paris had totally absorbed the provinces At the time when the French Revolution broke out, this first revolution was fully accomplished

The celebrated traveller Arthur Young left Paris soon after the meeting of the States-General, and à few days before the taking of the Bastille; the contrast between that which he had just seen in the city and that which he found beyond its walls filled him with surprise. In Paris all was noise and activity; every hour produced a fresh political pamphlet; as many as ninety-two were published in a week. 'Never,' said he, 'did I see such activity in publishing, even in London.' Out of Paris all seemed inert and silent; few pamphlets and no newspapers were printed. Nevertheless, the provinces were agitated and ready for action, him; motionless; if the inhabitants assembled from time to time, it was in order to hear the news which they expected from Paris In every town Young asked the inhabitants what they intended to do? 'The answer,' he says, 'was always the same: "Ours is but a provincial town; we must wait to see what will be done at Paris."

until they know what is thought at Paris.'

Nothing was more astonishing than the extraordinary ease with which the Constituent Assembly destroyed at a single stroke all the ancient French provinces, many of which were older than the monarchy, and then divided the kingdom methodically into eighty-three distinct portions, as though it had been the virgin soil of the New World. Europe was surprised and alarmed by a spectacle for which it was so little prepared. 'This is the first time,' said Burke, 'that we have seen men tear their native land in pieces in so barbarous a manner.' No doubt it appeared like tearing in pieces living bodies, but, in fact, the provinces that were thus dismembered were only corpses.

While Paris was thus finally establishing its supremacy externally, a change took place within its own walls equally deserving the notice of history. After having been a city merely of exchange, of business, of consumption, and of pleasure, Paris had now become a manufacturing town; a second fact, which gave to the first a new and more formidable character.

The origin of this change was very remote; it appears that even during the Middle Ages Paris was already the most industrious as well as the largest city of the kingdom. This becomes more manifest as we approach modern times. In the same degree that the business of administration was brought to Paris, industrial affairs found their way thither. As Paris became more and more the arbiter of taste, the sole centre of power and of the arts, and the chief focus of national activity, the industrial life of the nation withdrew and congentrated itself there in the same proportion.

Although the statistical documents anterior to the Revolution

are, for the most part, deserving of little confidence, I think it may safely be affirmed that, during the sixty years which preceded the French Revolution, the number of artisans in Paris was more than doubled, whereas during the same period the general population of the city scarcely increased one third

Independently of the general causes which I have stated, there were other very peculiar causes which attracted working men to Paris from all parts of France, and agglomerated them by degrees in particular quarters of the town, which they ended by occupying almost exclusively The restrictions imposed upon manufactures by the fiscal legislation of the time were lighter at Paris than anywhere else in France, it was nowhere so easy to escape from the tyranny of the guilds Certain faubourgs, such as the Faubourg St Antoine, and of the Temple specially, enjoyed great privileges of this nature Louis XVI considerably enlarged these immunities of the Faubourg St Antoine, and did his best to gather together an ammense working population in that spot, 'being desirous,' said that unfortunate monarch, in one of his edicts, 'to bestow upon the artisans of the Faubourg St Antoine a further mark of our protection, and to relieve them from the restrictions which are injurious to their interests as well as to the freedom of trade'

The number of workshops, manufactories, and foundries had increased so greatly in Paris, towards the approach of the Revolution that the Government at length became alarmed at it. The sight of this progress inspired it with many imaginary terrors. Amongst other things, we find an Order in Council in 1782, stating that 'the King, apprehending that the rapid increase of manufactures would cause a consumption of wood likely to become prejudical to the supply of the city, prohibits for the future the creation of any establishment of this nature within a circuit of fifteen leagues round Paris. The real danger likely to arise from such an agglomeration gave no uncasiness to any one

Thus then Paris had become the mistress of France, and the popular army which was destined to make itself master of Paris was already assembling

It is pretty generally admitted, I believe now, that administrative centralisation and the omnipotence of Paris have had a great share in the overthrow of all the arious governments which have succeeded one another during the last forty years. It will not be difficult to show that the same state of things contributed largely to the sudden and violent ruin of the old monarchy, and must be numbered among the principal causes of that first Revolution which has produced all the succeeding ones.

CHAPTER VIII

FRANCE WAS THE COUNTRY IN WHICH MEN HAD BECOME THE MOST ALIKE

If we carefully examine the state of society in France before the Revolution we may see it under two very contrary aspects. It would seem that the men of that time, especially those belonging to the middle and upper ranks of society, who alone were at all conspicuous, were all exactly alike. Nevertheless we find that this monotonous crowd was divided into many different parts by a prodigious number of small barriers, and that each of these small divisions formed a distinct society, exclusively occupied with its own peculiar interests, and taking no share in the life of the community at large.

When we consider this almost infinitesimal division, we shall perceive that the citizens of no other nation were so ill prepared to act in common, or to afford each other a mutual support during a crisis, and that a society thus constituted impit be utterly demolished in a moment by a great revolution. Imagine all those small barriers thrown down by an earthquake, and the result is at once a second body more compact and more homogeneous than any nerhans that the world had ever seen.

I have shown that throughout nearly the whole kingdom the independent life of the provinces had long been extinct, this had powerfully contributed to render all Frenchmen very much alike Through the diversities which still subsisted the unity of the nat on might already be discerned, uniformity of legislation brought it to light. As the eighteenth century advanced there was a great increase in the number of edicts, royal declarations and Orders in Council, applying the same regulations in the same manner in every part of the empire. It was not the governing body alone but the mass of those governed, who conceived the idea of a legislation so general and so uniform, the same everywhere and for all this idea was apparent in s]lt the plans of reform which succeeded each other for thirty years before the outbreak of the Revolution. Two centuries earlier the very materials for such conceptions, if we may use such a phrase, would have been wanting

Not only did the provinces become more and more alil e, but in each province men of various classes, those at least who were placed above the common people, grew to resemble each other more and more, in spite of differences of rank. Nothing displays this more clearly than the perusal of the instructions to the several Orders of the States General of 1789 The interests of those who drew them up were widely different, but in all else they were identical In the proceedings of the earlier States General the state of things was totally different, the middle classes and the nobility had then more common interests, more business in common, they displayed far less reciprocal animosity, yet they appeared to belong to two dis-tinet races Time, which had perpetuated, and, in many respects, aggravated the privileges interposed between two classes of men, had powerfully contributed to render them alike in all other respects For several centuries the French nobility had grown gradually poorer and poorer 'Spite of its privileges the nobility is ruined and wasted day by day, and the middle classes get possession of the large fortunes, wrote a nobleman in a melancholy strain in 1755 Yet the laws by which the estates of the nobility were protected still remained the same, nothing appeared to be changed in their economical condition Nevertheless, the more they lost their power the poorer they everywhere became, in exactly the same proportion

It would seem as if, in all human institutions as in man himself, there exists independently of the organs which man festly fulfil the various functions of existence, some central and invisible force which is the very principle of life. In vain do the organs appear to act as before, when this vivifying flame is extinct the whole structure languishes and dies The French nobility still had entails (indeed Burke remarked, that in his time entails were more frequent and more strict in France than in England), the right of primogeniture territorial and perpetual dues and whatever was called a beneficial interest in land. They had been relieved from the heavy obligation of carrying on war at their own charge, and at the same time had retained an increased exemption from taxation, that is to say they kept the compensation and got rid of the burden Moreover they enjoyed several other pecumary advantages which their forefathers had never possessed, nevertheless they gradually became impoverished in the same degree that they lost the exercise and the spirit of government Indeed it is to this gradual impoverishment that the vist subdivision of landed property, which we have already remarked, must be partly attributed. The nobles had sold their lands piecemeal to the peasants, reserving to themselves only the seignorial rights which gave them the appearance rather than the reality of their former position. Several provinces of France, like the Limonsin mentioned by Turgot, were filled with a small poor nobility, owning hardly any land, and living only on seignorial rights and rent-charges on their former

CHAP. VIII.

'In this district,' says an Intendant at the beginning of the century, 'the number of noble families still amounts to several thousands, but there are not fifteen amongst them who have twenty thousand livres a year.' I find in some minutes addressed by another Intendant (of Franche-Comté) to his successor, in 1750, 'the nobility of this part of the country is pretty good but extremely poor, and as proud as it is poor. It is greatly humbled compared to what it used to be It is not bad policy to keep the nobles in this state of poverty in order to compel them to serve. and to stand in need of our assistance. They form,' he adds, 'a confraternity, into which those only are admitted who can prove four quarterings. This confraternity is not patented but only allowed; it meets only once a year, and in the presence of the Intendant. After dining and hearing mass together, these noblemen return, every man to his home, some on their rosmantes and the rest on foot. You will see what a comical assemblage it is.'

This gradual impoverishment of the nobility was more or less apparent, not only in France, but in all parts of the Continent, in which, as in France, the feudal system was finally dying out without being replaced by a new form of aristocracy. This decay was especially manifest and excited great attention amongst the German States on the banks of the Rhine In England alone the contrary was the case. There the ancient noble families which still existed had not only kept, but greatly increased their fortunes; they were still first in riches as in power The new families which had risen beside them had only copied but had not surpassed their wealth.

In France the non-noble classes alone seemed to inherit all the wealth which the nobility had lost; they fattened, as it were, upon its substance. Yet there were no laws to prevent the middle class from raining themselves, or to assist them in acquiring riches; nevertheless they incessantly increased their wealth; in many instances they had become as rich as, and often richer than the nobles. Nav. more, their wealth was of the same kind, for, though dwelling

See Note XXIX Secretal Dues in different Provinces of France

in the town, they were often landowners in the country, and sometimes they even bought seignorial estates. Education and habits of life had already created a thousand other points of resemblance between these two classes of men. The middle class man was as enlightened as the noble, and it deserves to be remarked, his acquirements were derived from the very same source. The same light shone upon both. Their education had been equally theoretical and literary. Paris, which became more and more the sole preceptor of France, had ended by giving to all minds one common form and action. At the end of the eighteenth century no doubt some difference was still perceptible between the manners of the nobility and those of the middle class, for nothing assimilates more slowly than that surface of society which we call manners; at bottom, however, all men above the rank of the common people were alike; they had the same ideas, the same habits, the same tastes; they indulged in the same pleasures, read the same books, and spoke the same language. The only difference left between them was in their rights. I much doubt whether this was the case in the same degree anywhere else, even in England, where the different classes, though firmly united by common interests, still differed in their habits and feelings; for political liberty, which possesses the admirable power of placing the citizens of a State in compulsory intercourse and mutual dependence, does not on that account always make them similar; it is the government of one man which, in the end, has the mevitable effect of rendering all men alike, and all mutually indifferent to their common fate.

CHAPTER IX

SHOWING HOW MEN THUS SIMILAR WERE MORE DIVIDED THAN EVER INTO SMALL GROUPS, ESTRANGED FROM AND INDIFFERENT TO FACH OTHER

LET us now look at the other side of the picture, and we shall see that these same Frenchmen, who had so many points of recemblance amongst themselves, were, nevertheless, more completely isolated from each other than perhaps the inhabitants of any other country, or than had ever been the case before in France

It seems extremely probable that, at the time of the first establishment of the feudal system in Europe, the class which was subsequently called the nobility did not at once form a caste, but was originally composed of the cluef men of the nation, and was therefore, in the beginning, merely an aristocracy. This, however, is a question which I have no intention of discussing here, it will be sufficient to remark that, during the Middle Ages, the nobility had become a caste, that is to say, that its distinctive mark was birth

It retained, indeed, one of the proper characteristics of an aristocracy, that of being a governing body of citizens, but birth alone decided who should be at the head of this body. Whoever was not born noble was excluded from this close and particular class and could only fill a position more or less exalted but still subordinate in the State

Wherever on the continent of Europe the fendal system had been established it ended in caste, in England alone it returned to aristocracy

It has always excited my surprise that a fact which distinguishes England from all other modern nations and which alone can throw light upon the peculiarities of its laws its spirit, and its listors, has not attracted to a still greater degree the attention of philosophers and statemen and that both has rendered it, as it were imported to the I nglish themselves. It has frequently been seen by glimpees, and imported described but no complete, and distinct view has, I below ever been taken of it.

72

Montesquier, it is true, on visiting Great Britain in 1739, wrote, 'I am now in a country which has little resemblance to the rest of Europe ' but that is all

It was indeed, not so much its parliament, its liberty, its publicity, or its jury, which at that time rendered England so unlike the rest of Europe, it was something far more peculiar and far more powerful England was the only country in which the system of caste had been not only modified, but effectually de stroyed The nobility and the middle classes in England followed the same business, embraced the same professions, and, what is far more significant intermarried with each other The daughter of the greatest nobleman could already without disgrace marry a man of vesterday

In order to ascertun whether caste, with the ideas, habits, and barriers it creates amongst a nation, is definitely destroyed, look at its marriages They alone give the decisive feature which we seel. At this very day, in France, after sixty years of democracy, we shall generally seek it in vain The old and the new families, between which no distinction any longer appears to exist, avoid as much as possible to intermingle with each other by marriage

It has often been remarked that the English nobility has been more prudent, more able, and less exclusive than any other It would have been much nearer the truth to say, that in England, for a very long time past, no nobility, properly so called, has existed, if we take the word in the ancient and limited sense it has everywhere else retained

This singular revolution is lost in the night of ages, but a living witness of it yet survives in the idiom of language. For several centuries the word gentleman has altogether changed its meaning in England and the word noturier has ceased to exist. It would have been impossible to translate literally into English the wellknown line from the 'Tartuffe even when Molière wrote it in

Et tel quon le vo t il est bon gentilhomme

If we make a further application of the science of languages to the science of history, and pursue the fate of the word gentleman through time and through space,—the offspring of the I'ranch word gentilhomme,—we shall find its application extending in Ingland in the same proportion in which classes draw near one another and amalgamate In each succeeding century it is applied to persons placed somewhat lower in the social scale At length it travelled with the Linglish to America, where it is used to desig nate every citizen indiscriminately. Its history is that of democracy itself.

cracy itself.

In Trance the word gentilhomme has always been strictly limited to its original meaning; since the Revolution it has been almost disread but its application has never changed. The word limited to its original meaning; since the Revolution it has been almost disused, but its application has never changed. The word which was used to designate the members of the caste was kept intact, because the caste itself was maintained as separate from all the rest as it had ever been.

I go even further, and assert that this caste had become far more exclusive than it was when the word was first invented, and that in France a change had taken place in the direction opposed to that which had occurred in England.

Thought he politic and the middle class in France had become to that which had occurred in England.

Though the nobility and the middle class in France had become far more alike, they were at the same time more isolated from each other—two things which are easy essentially distinct that the former, instead of extenuating the latter, way frequently aggravate it.

74 ANCIENT IMPORTANCE OF THE TIERS LTAT BO

Provincial Estates, and subsequently the States-General, effected for the citizens of the towns

It is impossible to study the records of the States-General of the fourteenth century, and above all of the Provincial Estates of the same period, without being astonished at the importance of the place which the Tiers-Tiat filled in those assemblies, and at the power it wielded in them

As a man the burgess of the fourteenth century was, doubtless, very inferior to the burgess of the eighteenth, but the middle class, as a body, filled a far higher and more secure place in political society. Its right to a share in the government was uncontested, the part which it played in political assemblies was always considerable and often preponderating. The other classes of the community were forced to a constant reckoning with the people

But what strikes us most is, that the nobility and the Tiers-Etat found it at that time so much easier to transact business together, or to offer a common resistance, than they have ever found it since This is observable not only in the States General of the fourteenth century, many of which had an irregular and revolutionary character impressed upon them by the disasters of the time, but in the Provincial Estates of the same period, where nothing seems to have interrupted the regular and habitual course of affairs Thus, in Auvergne, we find that the three Orders took the most important measures in common, and that the execution of them was superintended by commissioners chosen equally from all three The same thing occurred at the same time in Champagne Every one knows the famous act by which, at the beginning of the same century, the nobles and burgesses of a large number of towns combined together to defend the franchises of the nation and the privileges of their provinces against the encroachments of the Crown During that period of French history we find many such episodes which appear as if borrowed from the history of England In the following centuries events of this character altogether disappeared 1

The fact is, that as by degrees the government of the lordships became disorganised, and the States General grew rarer or ceased attogether—that as the general liberties of the country were finally destroyed, involving the local liberties in their ruin—the burgess and the noble ceased to come into contact in public life. They no longer felt the necessity of standing by one another, or of a mutual compact, every day rendered them more independent of each other, but at the same time estranged them more and more. In the common taxes—the capitation tax and the twentieths, but, as if the exemption from taxation had been in itself a privilege so venerable that it was necessary to respect it in the very act by which it was infringed, care was taken to render the mode of collection different even when the tax was common. For one class it remained harsh and degrading, for the other indulgent and honourable.

See Note XXX. Self Government adverse to Stirit of Caste

Although inequality under taxation prevailed throughout the whole continent of Furope, there were very fix countries in which it had become so palpible or was so constantly felt as in I rance Throughout a great part of Germany most of the taxes were induced, and even with respect to the direct taxes, the privilege of the nobility frequently consisted only in bearing a smaller share of the common burden. There were, moreover, cortain taxes which fell only upon the nobles, and which were intended to replace the gratintous military service which was no longer existed. Now of all means of distinguishing one man from another

Now of all means of distinguishing one man from another and of marking the difference of classes inequality of taxation is the most permicious and the most calculated to add isolation to inequality, and in some sort to render both irremediable. Let us look at its effects. When the noble and the middle classes are not liable to the same tax, the assessment and collection of each years revenue draws affesh with sharpness and precision the line of demarcation between them. Every year each member of the privileged order feels an immediate and pressing interest in not suffering himself to be confounded with the mass and makes a fresh effort to place himself apart from it?

As there is scarcely any matter of public business that does not either arise out of or result in a tax it follows that as soon as the two classes are not equally liable to it they can no longer have any passon for common deliberation or any cause of common wants and desires no effort is needed to keep them asunder the occasion and the desire for common action have been removed

In the highly coloured description which Mr Burke gave of the ancient constitution of France he urged in favour of the constitution of the French nobility the ease with which the middle classes could be ennobled by acquiring an office he faucied that this bore some analogy to the open aristocracy of England Louis XI had it is true multiplied the grants of nobility with him it was a means of lowering the aristocracy his successors larished them in order to obtain money. Necker informs us, that in his time the number of offices which conferred nobility amounted to four thousand. Nothing like this existed in any other part of Europe, but the analogy which Burke sought to establish between France and England on this score was all the more false

If the middle classes of England, instead of making war upon the aristocracy, have remained so intimately connected with it, it is not specially because the aristocracy is open to all, but rather as has been said, because its outline is indistinct and its limit unknown—not so much because any man could be admitted into it as because it was impossible to say with certainty when he took rank there—so that all who approached it might look upon themselves as belonging to it, might take part in its rule, and derive either lustre or profit from its influence

Whereas the barrier which divided the nobility of France from the other classes, though easily enough passed, was always fixed and visible, and manifested itself to those who remained without, by striking and odious tokens. He who had once crossed it was separated from all those whose ranks he had just quitted by privileges which were burdensome and humilating to them.

The system of creating new nobles, far from lessening the hatred of the roturer to the nobleman, increased it beyond measure, it was envenomed by all the envy with which the new noble was looked upon by his former equals. For this reason the Tiers Etat, in all their complaints, always displayed more irritation against the newly-ennobled than against the old nobility, and far from demanding that the gate which led out of their own condition should be made wider, they continually required that it should be narrowed

At no period of French history had it been so easy to acquire nobility as in 1789, and never were the middle classes and the nobility so completely separated. Not only did the nobles refuse to endure, in their electoral colleges, any one who had the elightest taint of middle-class blood, but the middle classes also as carefully excluded all those who might in any degree be looked upons as noble. In some provinces the newly-ennobled were rejected by one class because they were not noble enough and by the other because they were too much so. This, it is said was the case with the celebrated Lavorier.

If, leaving the nobility out of the question we turn our attention to the middle classes we shall find the same state of things the man of the middle classes living almot as far apart from the common people as the noble was from the middle class Almost the whole of the middle class before the Revolution dwelt in the towns. Two causes had principally led to this result—the privileges of the nobles and the taille. The Seigneur who lived on his estates usually treated his peasants with a certain good-natured familiarity, but his arrogance towards his neighbours of the middle class was unbounded. It had never ceased to augment as his political power had diminished, and for that very reason, for on the one hand, as he had ceased to govern, he no longer had any interest in conclinating those who could assist him in that task, whilst, on the other, as has frequently been observed, he tried to console himself for the loss of real power by an immodirate display of his apparent rights. Even his absence from his estates, instead of reheving his neighbours, only served to increase their annoyance. Absenteeism had not even that good effect, for privileges enforced by proxy were all the more insupportable. I am not sure, however, that the taille, and all the taxes which

78

I am not sure, however, that the taille, and all the taxes which had been assumilated to it, were not still more powerful causes

I could show, I think, in very few words, why the taille and its accessories pressed much more heavily on the country than on the towns, but the reader would probably think it superfluous It will be sufficient to point out that the middle classes, gathered together in the towns could find a thousand means of alleviating the weight of the taille, and often indeed of avoiding it altogether, which not one of them could have employed singly had he remained on the estate to which he belonged Above all, he thereby escaped the obligation of collecting the taille, which he dreaded far more than that of paying it, and not without reason, for there never was under the old Trench Government, or, I believe, under any Government, a worse condition than that of the parochial collector I shall have occasion to show this hereafter Yet no one in a village except the nobles could escape this office, and rather than subject himself to it the rich man of the middle class let his estates and withdrew to the neighbouring town Turgot coxcides with all the secret documents which I have had an opportunity of consulting when he says that 'the collecting of the taille converts all the non noble landowners of the country into burgesses of the towns Indeed this, to make a passing remarl was one of the chief causes why France was fuller of towns and especially of small towns than almost any other country in Europe

Once ensconced within the walls of a town a wealthy though low born member of the middle class soon lost the tastes and ideas of rural life he became totally estranged from the labours and of the nobles with respect to taxation were justly complained of, but what then can be said of those enjoyed by the middle class? The offices which exempted them wholly or in part from public burdens were counted by thousands one exempted them from the militia, another from the corice, a third from the faille there a parish, says a writer of the time, 'that does not contain, independently of the nobles and ecclesiastics, a number of inhabitants who have purchased for themselves, by dint of places or commissions, some sort of exemption from taxation?' One of the reasons why a certain number of offices destined for the middle classes were, from time to time, abolished is the diminution of the receipts caused by the exemption of so large a number of persons from the faille I have no doubt that the number of those exempted among the middle class was as great as, and often greater than, among the nobility

DOOK II

80

These miserable privileges filled those who were deprived of them with enty, and those who enjoyed them with the most selfish pride Nothing is more striking throughout the eighteenth century than the hostility of the citizen of the towns towards the surrounding peasantry, and the jealousy felt by the peasants of the townspeople 'Lvery single town,' says Turgot, 'absorbed by its own separate interests, is ready to sacrifice to them the country and the villages of its district' 'You have often been obliged,' said he, elsewhere, in addressing his Sub-delegates, 'to repress the constant tendency to usurpation and encroachment which characterises the conduct of the towns towards the country people and the villages of their district'

Even the common people who dwelt within the walls of the towns with the middle classes became estranged from and almost hostile to them Most of the local burdens which they imposed were so contrived as to press most heavily on the lower classes More than once I have had occasion to ascertain the truth of what Turgot also says in another part of his works, namely, that the middle classes of the towns had found means to regulate the octross in such a manner that the burden did not fall on themselves

What is most obvious in every act of the French middle classes, was their dread of being confounded with the common people, and their passionate desire to escape by every means in their power from popular control 'If it were his Majesty's pleasure,' said the burgesses of a town, in a memorial addressed to the Comptroller General, 'that the office of mayor should become elective, it would be proper to oblige the electors to choose

RIGHT OF ELECTION BY WORKING CLASSES him only from the chief notables, and even from the corporation

81

We have seen that it was a part of the policy of the Kings of France successively to withdraw from the population of the towns the exercise of their political rights From Louis XI to Louis XV their whole legilation betrays this intention; frequently the burges es themselves seconded that intention, sometimes they

suggested it

82 THE MIDDLE CLASSES—THE COMMON PEOPLE BOOK II

force of its analysis. I have discovered not less than thirty six d's tinct bodies among the notables of one small town. These distinct bodies though already very diminutive, were constantly employed in reducing each other to still narrower dimensions. They were perpetually throwing off the heterogeneous particles they might still contain, so was to reduce themselves to the most simple still contain, so was to reduce themselves to the most simple to no more than three or four members but their personality of perpetually involving on the interpreture in particles they still contain, so at to reduce themselves to the most simple elements. Some of them were reduced by this elaborate process to no more than three or four members but their personality only became more intense and their tempers more contentions. All of them were separated from each other by some diminutive privileges the least henourable of which was still a mark of honour Between them raged funces and disputes for precedency. The In tendant, and even the Courts of Justice were distracted by their quarrels 'It has just been decided that holy water is to be officed to the magistrates (le presidual) before it is offered to the corporation. The Parliament hesitated but the King has called up the affair to his Connoil, and decided it himself. It was high time this question had thrown the whole town into a ferment. If one of these bodies obtained precedency over another in the general Assembly of Notables, the latter instantly withdrew, and preferred abandoning altogether the public business of the community rather than submitted an ontrage on his dignity.—The body of rather tum perimiters of the town of La Fledin decided that it would express in this manner as well-founded first occasioned by the procededley which had been granted to the bakers A portion of tle notables of another town obstinately refused to perform their office because as the Intendant reported 'some artisans have been introduced into the Assembly with whom the principal burgesses cannot bear to associate, If the place of sheriff, said the Intend ant of another province, be given to a notary, the other notables will be disgusted as the notaries are here men of no birth not being of the families of the notables and all of them having been stal who so readily decided that the people ought to be deprived of their political rights were singularly perplexed when they had to determine who the notables were to be and what order of precidingly was to be established amongst them. In such a strait they presume only to express their doubts fearing as they said 'to cause to some of their fillow-citizens too sensible a mortification. The rating aranity of the Franch was strongthened and stimulated by the indexing some of their fillow-citizens too sensible a mortification and the legitim the prile of the citizens was forgotten. Most of these small corporations, of which I have been speaking

clerks Tie six best citizens whom I have already mentioned

already existed in the sixteenth century, but at that time their members, after having settled among themselves the business of their own fraternity, joined all the other citizens to transact in common the public business of the city. In the eighteenth century these bodies were almost entirely wripped up; in themselves, for the concerns of their municipal life had become scarce, and they were all managed by delegates. Each of these small communities, therefore, lived only for itself, was occupied only with itself, and had no affairs but its own interests.

Our forefathers had not yet acquired the term of individuality, which we have comed for our own use, because in their times there was no such thing as an individual not belonging it store group of persons, and who could consider himself as absolutely alone, but each of the thousand little groups, of which Trench society was then composed, thought only of itself. It was, if I may, so express myself, a state of collective individuality, which prepared the French mind for that state of positive individuality which is the characteristic of our own time.

But what is most strange is that all these men, who stood so much aloof from one another, had become so extremely similar amongst themselves that if their positions had been changed no mongst themselves that if their positions had been changed no any one could have equivalent their innerment forwards, would have found that the slight barriers which still divided spersors in all other respects so similar appeared to themselves alike contrary to the public interest and to common sense, and that in theory they already worshipped the uniformity of society and the unity of power Each of them clung to his own particular condition, only because a particular condition was the distinguishing mark of others, but all were ready to confound their own condition in the same mass, provided no one retained any separate lot or rose above the common level

CHAPTER X

THE DESTRICTION OF POLITICAL LIBERTY AND THE ESTRANGEMENT OF CLASSES WERE THE CAUSES OF ALMOST ALL THE DISORDERS WHICH LED TO THE DISSOLUTION OF THE OLD SOCIETY OF FRANCE

Or all the divorders which attacked the constitution of secrety in France, 18th existed before the Revolution, and led to the dissolition of that secrety, that which I have just described was the motifatal. But I must purse the inquirry to the source of so dangerous and strange an evil, and show how many other evils took their origin from the same cause.

If the Linghish had, from the period of the Middle Ages, altogether lost, like the Trench, political freedom and all those local franchises which cannot long east without it, it is highly probable that each of the different classes of which the English anstormed is composed would have second from the rest, as was the case in I rance and more or less all ever the continent, and that all those classes together would have separated themselves from the people But freedom compelled them always to rumain within rach of exaggerate when I say that I have had this at least an hundred times in the first houses of our islands It is, however, a thing that in the present state of manners in France would not be met with from Calais to Bayonne, except by chance in the house of some great Lord, who had been much in England, and then not unless it were asked for I once knew it at the Duke de Lancourt s '1

Unquestionably the English aristocracy is of a haughtier nature than that of France, and less disposed to mingle familiarly with those who live in a humbler condition, but the obligations of its own rank have imposed that duty upon it It submitted that it_ might command. For centuries no inequality of taxation has existed in England, except such exemptions as have been successwelv introduced for the relief of the indigent classes Observe to what results different political principles may lead nations so nearly contiguous! In the eighteenth century, the poor man in England enjoyed the privilege of exemption from taxation, the rich in France In one country the aristocracy has taken upon itself the heaviest public burdens, in order to retain the government of the State, in the other the aristocracy retained to the last exemption from taxation as a compensation for the loss of political power

In the fourteenth century the maxim ' No tax without the consent of the taxed '-n imp ve q is no reul-appeared to be as firmly established in France as in England It was frequently quoted, to contrivene it always seemed an act of tyranny, to conform to it was to revert to the law At that period, as I have already remarked, a multitude of analogies may be traced between the political institutions of France and those of England but then the destinies of the two nations separated and constantly became more unlike, as time advanced They resemble two lines starting from contiguous points at a slight angle which diverge indefinitely as they are prolonged

I venture to aftern that when the French nation exhausted by the protracted disturbances which had accompanied the captivity of Ling John and the madness of Charles VI suffered the Crown to levy a general tax without the consent of the people and when the nobility had the baseness to allow the middle and lower classes to be so taxed on condition that its own exemption should be maintained at that very time was sown the seed of almost all the vices and almost all the abuses which afflicted the ancient society of I rance during the remainder of its existence, and ended by causing its violent dissolution, and I admire the rare sagacity of Philippe

¹ Sec Note XX VII Arthur lour, s Tour

86

de Comines when he says, 'Charles VII , who gained the point of laying on the taille at his pleasure, without the consent of the States of the Realm, laid a heavy burden on his soul and on that of his successors, and gave a wound to his kingdom which will not soon he closed?

Observe how that wound widened with the course of years, follow step by step that fact to its consequences

Forbonnais says with truth in his learned 'Researches on the Finances of France, that in the Middle Ages the sovereigns generally hved on the revenues of their domains, and 'as the extraordinary wants of the State,' he adds, 'were provided for by extraordinary subsidies, they were levied equally on the clergy, the nobility, and the people'

The greater part of the general subsidies voted by the three Orders in the course of the fourteenth century were, in point of fact, so levied Almost all the taxes established at that time were undirect, that is, they were paid indiscriminately by all classes of consumers Sometimes the tax was direct, but then it was assessed, not on property, but on income The nobles, the priests, and the burgesses were bound to pay over to the King, for a year, a tenth, for instance, of all their incomes This remark as to the charges voted by the Estates of the Realm applies equally to those which were imposed at the same period by the different Provincial Estates within their own territories

It is true that already, at that time, the direct tax known by the name of the taille was never levied on the noble classes obligation of gratuitous military service was the ground of their exemption, but the taille was at that time partially in force as a general impost belonging rather to the seignorial jurisdictions than to the lingdom was soon decupled, and all the new taxes assumed the character of the taille. Every year, therefore, inequality of taxation separated the classes of society and isolated the individuals of whom they consisted more deeply than before. Since the object of taxation was not to include those most able to pay taxes, but those least able to defend themselves from paying, the monstrous consequence was brought about that the rich were exempted and the poor burdened. It is related that Cardinal Mazarin, being in want of money, hit upon the expedient of levying a tax upon the principal houses in Paris, but that having encountered some opposition from the parties concerned, he contented himself with adding the five millions he required to the general brevet of the taille. He meant to tax the wealthiest of the King's subjects; he did tax the most indigent; but to the Treasury the result was the same.

The produce of taxes thus unjustly allotted had limits; but the demands of the Crown had none. Yet the Kings of France would neither convoke the States-General to obtain subsidies, nor would they provoke the nobility to demand that measure by imposing taxes on them without it.

Hence arose that prodigious and mischievous fecundity of financial expedients, which so peculiarly characterised the administration of the public resources during the last three centuries of the old French monarchy.

It is necessary to study the details of the administrative and financial history of that period, to form a conception of the volent and unwarrantable proceedings which the want of money may prescribe even to a mild Government, but without publicity and without control, when once time has sanctioned its power and delivered it from the dread of revolution—that last safeguard of nations.

Every page in these annals tells of possessions of the Crown first sold and then resumed as unsaleable, of contracts violated and of vested interests ignored; of sacrifices wrung at every crisis from the public creditor, and of incessant repudiations of public

engagements 1

Privileges granted in perpetuity were perpetually resumed. If we could bestow our compassion on the disappointments of a fooliesh vanity, the fate of those luckless persons might deserve it who purchased letters of nobility, but who were exposed during the whole of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries to buy over and over egain the empty honours or the unjust purileges which they had already paid for several times. Thus Louis XIV

¹ See Note XXXIX , Violation of Vested and Corporate Bights

annulled all the titles of nobility acquired in the preceding ninetytwo years, though most of them had been confurred by himself, but they could only be retained upon furnishing a firsh subsidy, all it see titles having leen of timed by surprise, said the edict. The same example was duly followed by I oms XV cighty years later. The militis man was forbidden to procure a sub titute, for fear it was said of raising the price of recruits to the State

Towns corporations, and hospitals were compelled to break their own engagements in order that they might be able to lend money to the Crown Parishes were restrained from undertaking works of pullic improvement lest by such a diversion of their resources they should pay their direct taxes with less punctuality

It is related that M Orry and M Trud une, of whom one was the Comptroller General and the other the Director General of Public Works had formed a plan for substituting for it is forced labour of the persantry on the roads a rate to be levied on the inhabitants of each district for the repair of their thoroughfures. The reason which led these able administrators to forego that plan is instructive they feared, it is said that when a fund had been raised by such a rate it would be impossible to prevent it e. Treasury from appropriating the money to its own purposes, so that ere long the ratepayers would have had to support both the new money payment and the old charge of forced labour. I do not hestite to say that no private person could have excepted the grasp of the criminal law who should have managed his own fortune as the Great Louis in all his glory managed the fortune of the nation.

If you stumble upon any old establishment of the Middle Ages which maintained itself with every argravation of its original defects in direct opposition to the spirit of the age or upon any mischievous innovation search to the root of the evil—you will find it to be some financial expedient perpetuated in the form of an institution. To meet the pressure of the hour new powers were called into being which lasted for centuries

A peculiar tax which was called the due of franc-f-of had been levied from a d stant period on the non noble loiders of mobile lands. This tax established between lands the same distinction which existed between the claves of society and the one constantly tended to increase the other. Perhaps this due of frine fife contributed more than any other custs to separate the rol rier and the noble because it prevented them from mingling together in that which most speedily and most effectually assumilates men to each other—in the pose 'so on of land. A classification.

thus opened between the noble landowner on the one hand, and his neighbour, the non noble landowner, on the other Nothing, on the contrary, contributed to hasten the cohesion of these two classes in England more than the abolition, as early as the sixteenth century, of all outward distinctions between the fiefs held under the Crown and lands held in villenage '

In the fourteenth century this feudal tax of franc fief was hight, and was only levied here and there, but in the eighteenth occurry, when the feudal system was well migh abolished, it was rigorously exacted in France every twenty years, and it amounted to one whole years revenue. A son paid it on succeeding his father 'This tax, said the Agricultural Society of Tours in 1761, 'is extremely injurious to the improvement of the art of husbandry. Of all the imposts borne by the King's subjects there is indisputably none so vexitions and so onerous to the rural population.' 'This duty,' sud another contemporary writer, 'which was at first levied but once in a lifetime, is become in course of time a very cruel burden.' The nobles themselves would have been glad that it should be abolished, for it prevented persons of inferior condition from purchasing their lands, but the fiscal demands of the State required that it should be maintained and increased.

The Middle Ages are sometimes erroneously charged with all the evils arising from the trading or industrial corporations. But at their origin the e-guilds and companies served only as means to connect the members of a given cilling with each other, and to establish in each trade a free government in miniature whose busingss it was at once to as it and to control the working classes. Such, and no more seems to have been the intention of St. Louis.

It was not till the commencement of the sixteenth century, in the midst of that period which is termed the Revival of Arts and Letters that it was proposed for the first time to consider the right to labour in a particular vocation as a privilege to be sold by the Crown Then it was that each Company became a small close anistoracy, and at list those monopolies were established which were so prejudicial to the progres of the arts and which so exist period the last generation. From the reign of Henry III, who generalised the evil if he did not give birth to it down to Louis VI, who extripated it it may be said that the abuse of the system of guilds never ceased to augment and to spread at the very time

If This remark must be taken with some qualification as to the fact. These distinctions are not wholly eradicalled at the present day in England but they are more questions of property not of personal rank or political in figure 2. See Note VI. when the progress of society rendered those institutions more insupportable, and when the common sense of the public was most opposed to them Year after year more professions were deprived of their freedom, year after year the privileges of the incorporated trides were increased. Never was the evil carried to greater lengths than during what are commonly cilled the prosperous years of the reign of Louis XIV, because at no former period had the want of money been more imperious, or the resolution not to ruse money with the assent of the nation more firmly taken Letrone said with truth in 1775—'The State has only established the trading compunes to furnish pecuniary resources, partly by the patents which it sells, partly by the creation of new offices which the Companies are forced to buy up. The Edict of 1673 carried the principles of Henry III to their furthest consequences by compelling all the Companies to take out letters of confirmation upon payment for the same, and all the workmen who were not yet incorporated in some one of these bodies were compelled to enter them. This wretched expedient brought in three hundred thousand hyres'

We have already seen how the whole municipal constitution of the towns was overthrown not by any political design, but in the hope of picking up a pittance for the Treasury This same want of money, combined with the desire not to seek it from the States-General of the Lingdom, gave rise to the vensity of public offices, which became at last a thing so strange that its like had never been seen in the world. It was by this institution, engen dered by the fiscal spirit of the Government that the vanity of the middle classes was kept on the stretch for three centuries and exclusively directed to the acquisition of public employments, and thus was the universal pission for places made to penetrate to the lowels of the nation where it became the common source of revolutions and of servitude

As the financial embarrassments of the State increased, new office as spring up all of which were remunerated by exemptions from taxation and by privileges, and as these offices were produced by the wants of the Tecsury, not of the administration, the results was the creation of an almost incredible number of employments which were altogether superfluous or mischierous. As early as 1661, upon an inquiry instituted by Colbert it was found that the capital invested in this wretched property amounted to nearly five hundred millions of larges. Richelieu had suppressed, it was said, a hundred thousand offices but they cropped out again and received with the suppressed of the property amounted to the said of the suppressed of the property and the suppressed of the General caused the Parliaments to be entrusted with most of their political functions, the result was an intermixture of judicial and administrative effices, which proved extremely injurious to the good conduct of business. It was necessary to seem to afford some new guarantees in place of those which were taken away, for though the Prench support absolute power putiently enough, so long as it be not oppressive, they never like the sight of it, and it is always prudent to raise about it some appearance of barriers, which serve at least to conceal what they do not aways.

BOOK II

arrest Lustly, it was this desire of preventing the nation, when asked for its money, from asking back its freedom, which give rise to an incessant watchfulness in separating the classes of society, so that they should never come together, or combine in a common resistance, and that the Government should never have on its hands at once more than a very small number of men separated from the rest of the nation In the whole course of this long history, in which have figured so many princes remarkable for their ability, sometimes remarkable for their genius, almost always remarkable for their courage not one of them ever made an effort to bring together the different classes of his people, or to unite them otherwise than by subjecting them to a common voke exception there is, indeed, to this remark one king of France there was who not only desired this end, but applied himself with his whole heart to attain it, that prince-for such are the inscrutable undements of Providence-was Louis XVI

The separation of classes was the crime of the old I rench monarchy but it became its excuse, for when all those who constitute the rich and enlightened portion of a nation can no longer agree and co operate in the work of government, a country can by no possibility administer itself and a master must intervene

no possibility administer itself and a master must intervene

'The nution, said Turgot, with an air of melancholy, in a secret report addressed to the Ling is a community, consisting of different orders ill compacted together, and of a people who e intenders have very few tres among themselves, so that every man is exclusively engrossed by his personal interest. Nowhere is any common interest discernible. The villages, the towns have tot my stronger mutual relations than the districts to which they belong. They cannot even agree among themselves to carry on the lull he works which they require. A mulet this perpetual conflict of pricensions and of undertakings your Majisty is compelled to decide overything in person or by your agents. Sour special injunctions are expected before men will contribute to the public

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE SPECIES OF LIBERTY WHICH EXISTED UNDER THE OLD MONARCHY, AND OF THE INFLUENCE OF THAT LIBERTY ON THE REVOLUTION

If the reader were here to interrupt the perusal of this book, he would have but a very imperfect impression of the government of the old French monarchy, and he would not understand the state of society produced by the Revolution

Since the citizens of Trance were thus divided and thus contracted within themselves, since the power of the Crown was so extensive and so great, it might be inferred that the spirit of independence had disappeared with public liberty, and that the whole French people were equally bent in subjection. Such was not the case, the Government had long conducted absolutely and alone all the common affairs of the nation, but it was as yet by no means master of every individual existence.

Amidst many institutions already prepared for absolute power some liberty survived, but it was a sort of strange liberty, which it is not easy at the present day to conceive aright, and which must be very closely scrutinised to comprehend the good and the evil resulting from it

Whilst the Central Government superseded all local powers, and filled more and more the whole sphere of public authority, some institutions which the Government had allowed to subsist, or which it had created some old castoms, some america minners, some abuses even served to check its action, to keep alive in the hearts of a large number of persons a spirit of resistance, and to preserve the consistency and the independent outline of many characters

Centralisation had already the same tendency, the same mode of operation, the same aims as in our own time, but it had not yet the same power Government having, in its engerness to turn everything into money, put up to sale most of the public officers, had thus deprived itself of the power of gring or withdrawing those offices at pleasure. Thus one of its previous had considerably impaired the success of another: its rapacity had balanced its ambition. The State was therefore incessantly reduced to act through instruments which it had not forged, and which it could not break. 'The consequence was that its most absolute will was frequently paralysed in the execution of it. This strange and vicious constitution of the public offices thus stood in stead of a sort of political guarantee against the omnipotence of the central power. It was a sort of irregular and ill-constructed breakwater, which divided the action and checked the stroke of the supreme power.

Nor did the Government of that day dispose as yet of that countless multitude of favours, assistances, honours, and moneys which it has now to distribute; it was therefore far less able to seduce as well as to compel.

The Government moreover was imperfectly acquainted with the exact limits of its power. None of its rights were regularly acknowledged or firmly established; its range of action was already immense. That, that action was still hesitating and uncertain, as one who gropes along a dark and unknown track. This formidable obscurity, which at that time concealed the limits of every power and enshrouded every right, though it might be favourable to the designs of princes against the freedom of their subjects, was frequently not less favourable to the defence of it.

The administrative power, conscious of the novelty of its origin and of its low extraction, was ever tunid in its action when any obstacle crossed its path. It is striking to observe, in reading the correspondence of the French Ministers and Intendants of the eighteenth century, how this Government, which was so absolute and so encroaching as long as its authority is not contested, stood aghast at the aspect of the least resistance, sontated by the slightest criticism, alarmed by the slightest noise, ready on all such occasions to stop, to hesitate, to parley, to treat, and often to fall considerably below the natural limits of its power. The nericeless egotism of Louis XV., and the mild benevolence of his successor, contributed to this state of things It never occurred to these sovereigns that they could be dethroned. They had nothing of that harsh and restless temper which fear has since often imnarted to those who govern. They trampled on none but those whom they did not see.

Several of the privileges, of the prejudices, of the false notions most opposed to the establishment of a regular and salutary free government, kept alive amongst many persons a spirit of independence, and disposed them to hold their ground against the abuses of authority.

The Nobles despised the Administration, properly so called. though they sometimes had occasion to apply to it. I'ven after they had abundoned their former power, they retained something of that pride of their forefathers which was able adverse to servitude and to law. They cared little for the general liberty of the community, and readily allowed the hand of authority to lie heavy on all about them; but they did not admit that it should be heavy on themselves, and they were ready in case of need to run all risks to prevent it. At the commencement of the Revolution that nobility of France which was about to fall with the throne, still held towards the King, and still more towards the King's agents. an attitude far higher, and language far more free, than the middle class, which was so soon to overthrow the monarchy. Almost all the guarantees against the abuse of power which I ranco possessed during the thirty-seven years of her representative government, were already loudly demanded by the nobles. In reading the instructions of that Order to the States-General, amidst its prejudices and its crotchets, the spirit and some of the great qualities of an aristocracy may still be felt. It must ever be deplored that, instead of bending that nobility to the discipline of law, it was uprooted and struck to the earth. By that act the nation was deprived of a necessary portion of its substance, and a wound was given to freedom which will never be healed. A class which has marched for ages in the first rank has acquired, in this long and uncontested exercise of greatness, a certain loftiness of heart, a natural confidence in its strength, and a habit of being looked up to, which makes it the most resisting element in the frame of society. Not only is its own disposition manly, but its example serves to augment the manliness of every other class By extirpating such an Order its very enemies are enervated. Nothing can ever completely replace it; it can be born no more; it may recover the titles and the estates, but not the soul of its progenitors

The Clergy, who have since frequently shown themselves so servilely submissive to the temporal sovereign in civil matters, whosoever that temporal sovereign might be, and who become his most barefaced flatterers on the slightest indication of favour to the Church, formed at that time one of the most independent bodies in and very firmly established, that the nations which deprive the Roman Catholic clergy of all participation in landed property, and convert their incomes into salaries, do in fact only promote the interests of the Papacy, and those of the temporal Ruler, whilst they renounce an important element of freedom amongst themselves.

¹ See Note XLIV , Instructions of the Order of Nobility at the States General of 1789.

A man who, as fir as the best portion of his nature is concerned. is the subject of a foreign authority, and who in the country where he dwells can have no family, will only be linked to the soil by one durable tie-namely, landed property. Break that bond, and he belongs to no place in particular. In the place where the accident of hirth may have cast hum, he lives like an alien in the midst of a civil community, scarcely any of whose civil interests can directly affect him. His conscience binds him to the Pope; his maintenance to the Sovereign. His only country is the Church. In every political event he perceives little more than the advantage or the loss of his own profession. Let but the Church be free and prosperous, what matters all the rest? His most natural political state is that of indifference-an excellent member of the Christian commonwealth, but elsewhere a worthless citizen. Such sentiments and such opinions as these in a body of men who are the directors of childhood, and the guardians of morality, cannot fail to enervate the soul of the entire nation in relation to public life

A correct impression of the revolution which may be effected in the human mind by a change wrought in social conditions, may be obtained from a perusal of the Instructions given to the Delegates of the Clergy at the States-General of 1789.

The clergy in those documents frequently showed their intolerance, and sometimes a tenacious attachment to several of their former privileges; but, in other respects, not less hostile to despotism, not less favourable to civil liberty, not less enamoured of political liberty, than the middle classes or the nobility, this Order proclaimed that personal liberty must be secured, not by promises alone, but by a form of procedure analogous to the Habeas Corpus They demanded the destruction of the State prisons, the abolition of extraordinary jurisdictions and of the practice of calling up causes to the Council of State, publicity of procedure, the permanence of judicial officers, the admissibility of all ranks to public employments, which should be open to merit alone; a system of military recruiting less oppressive and humiliating to the people, and from which none should be exempted; the extinction by purchase of seignorial rights, which spring from the feudal system were, they said, contrary to freedom, unrestricted freedom of ing complaints or from recording their opinions, and as the linguage of the Courts still preserved the tone of that old language of France which loved to call things by their right names, the magistrates not unfrequently stignatised the acts of the Government as arbitrary and despote. The irregular intervention of the Courts in the affairs of government, which often disturbed the conduct of them, thus served occasionally to protect the liberties of the subject. The evil was great, but it served to carb a greater evil said a contemporary writer, in language which, though eccentric, is spirited, "apt to melt and dissipate the metals, they are not prone to pay them habitual reverence, and they will not be slow to turn again to their former idels, to valour, to glory, and, I will add, to magnanimity"

The baseness of mankind is, moreover, not to be estimated by the degree of their subserviency to a sovereign power, that standard would be an incorrect one However submissive the French may have been before the Revolution to the will of the King one sort of obedience was altogether unknown to them they knew not what it was to how before an illeg timate and contested nower -a power but little honoured, frequently despised, but which is willingly endured because it may be serviceable or because it may hurt To this degrading form of servitude they were ever strangers The King inspired them with feelings which none of the most absolute princes who have since appeared in the world have been able to call forth, and which are become incomprehensible to the present generation, so entirely has the Revolution extirpated them from the hearts of the nation They loved him with the affection due to a father, they revered him with the respect due to God In submitting to the most arbitrary of his commands they yielded less to compul ion than to loyalty, and thus they frequently preserved great freedom of mind even in the most complete depend ence To them the greatest evil of obedience was compulsion , to us it is the least the worst is in that servile sentiment which leads men to obey We have no right to despise our forefathers Would to God that we could recover with their prejudices and their faults, something of their greatne s

It would then be a mistake to think that the state of society in I rance before the Revolution was one of servility and dependence. Unclin more liberty existed in that society than in our own time, but it was a species of irregular and intermittent liberty always contracted within the bounds of certain classes linked to the notion of complicion and of privilege, which rendered it almost as easy to deft the law as to defy arbitrary power, and secreely ever went for enough to furnish to all classes of the community the most intural and neces ary securities. Thus reduced and thus deformed liberty was still not infimitful. It was this liberty which at the very time when centralisation was tending more and more to equilise to emisculate, and to dum the character of the nation still preserved.

her Note L. Alsol te Government unli r the Mon see Note II of the Icasons arely which free ently jut a r trait on amongst a large class of private persons their native vigous, their colons, and their outline, fostered self-repect in the heart, and often caused the love of glory to predominate over every other taste. By this liberty were farmed those vigorous characters, those proud and during spirits which were about to appear, and were to in the large Revolution at once the object of the admiration and the terror of succeeding generations. It would have been so strugge that virtue so misseuline should have grown on a soil where freedom was no more tion was no more.

But if thus soit of ill-regulated and morbid liberty prepared the Prench to overflow despoti-in, perhaps it lil custo rendered them less fit thin any other people to establish in hea of that despotism the free and peaceful empire of constitutional law.

CHAPPER XII

SHOWING THAT THE CONDITION OF THE FPENCH PEASINTRI, NOT-WITHSTINDING THE PROGRESS OF CHILISATION, WAS SOMETHIES WORSE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY THAN IT HAD BEEN IN THE THIRTFLYTH

Is the eighteenth century the Trench persontry could no longer be proved upon by petty feudal despots, they were seldom the object of violence on the part of the Government, they enjoyed civil liberty, and were owners of a portion of the soil, but all the other clauses of society stood aloof from this class, and perhaps in no other part of the world had the persontry ever lived so entirely along the effects of this novel and singular kind of oppression deserted a very attentive senarate consideration. no longer the subjects of the gentry, the gentry were not yet the fellow citizens of the persontry—a state of things unparalleled in history

This give rise to a sort of absentecism of fiching, if I my sorpress myself, even more frequent and more effectival than absentecism properly so called I lence it arose that a gentleman residing on his cetate frequently displayed the views and sentiments which his steward would have entertained in his ab ence, like his steward, he learned to look upon his tenants as his debtors, and he rigorously exacted from them all that he could claim by law or by custom, which sometimes rendered the application of the list remnant of fendal rights more harsh than it had been in the fendal times

Often emburrassed, and always needy, the small gentry lived shabbily in their country houses, caring only to amiss money enough to spend in town during the winter. The people, who often find an expression which hits the truth, had given to these small squires the name of the least of the birds of prey, a lobereau a sort of Squire kite.

No doubt individual exceptions might be presented to these observations. I speak of classes which ought alone to detruit the attention of history. That there were in those times many rich landowners who without any necessary occasion and without a common interest attended to the welfare of the persuitry, who will deny? But these were persons who struggled successfully against the law of their new condition, which in spite of them selves was driving them into indifference as it was driving their former avesals into hatted.

This abandonment of a country life by the nobility 1 as often been attributed to the peculiar influence of certain ministers and certain lings—by some to Ricl elieu by others to Lonis XIV—It was no doubt an idea almost always pursued by the kings of France during the three last centuries of the monarchy to separate the gentry from the people and to attract the former to Court and to public en ployments—This was especially to case in the seventeenth century when the nobility were still an object of fewr to royalty—Amongst the questions addressed to the Int indicates the general province high to stay at home or to go abroad?

A 1 tter from an Intendant has been f und giving his answer on this subject. I olaments that tile gentry of his province like to romain with their peasants instead of fulfilling their duties about the King. And let it hero be well remarked that it province of which this Intendent was speaking w's Anjou—that province which was afterwards Lo Vende. These country gentlemen who refused, as he said, to fulfil their duties about the king, were the only country gentlemen who defended with arms in their brinds the monrichy in Plance, and died there fighting for the Crown, they owed this glorious distinction simply to the fact that they had found means to return their hold over the persuntry—that peasantry with whom they were blamed for wishing to live

Nevertheless the abundonment of the country by the class which then formed the head of the French nation must not be mainly attributed to the direct influence of some of the French lings. The principal and permanent cause of this fact lay not so much in the will of certain men as in the slow and incessant influence of institutions, and the proof is, that when, in the eighteenth century, the Government endeavoured to combat this evil, it could not even check the progress of it. In proportion as the noblity completely lost its political rights without acquiring others, and as local freedom disappeared, this emigration of the nobles increased. It became unnecessary to entice them from their homes, they cared not to remain there. Rural life had become distasteful to them.

What I here say of the nobles applies in all countries to rich landowners. In all centralised countries the rural districts loss their weighty and enlightened inhabituits. I might add that in all centralised countries the art of cultivation remains imperfect and unimproved—a commentary on the profound remark of Montesquieu, which determines his meaning when he says that 'land produces less by reason of its own fertility than of the freedom of its inhabitants. But I will not transgress the limits of my subject.

resided amongst the peasantry and in constant intercourse with them, was the parish priest. The result was that the priest would have become the master of the rural populations, in spite of Voltaire, if he had not been himself so nearly and ostensibly linked to the political order of things; the possession of several political privileges exposed him in some degree to the hatred inspired by those political institutions.

The peasant was thus almost entirely separated from the upper classes; he was removed from those of his fallow-creatures who might have assisted and directed him. In proportion as they att uned to enlightenment or competency, they turned their backs on him; he stood, as it were, tabooed and set apart in the midst of the nation.

This state of things did not exist in an equal degree amongstany of the other civilised nations of Europe, and even in France it was comparatively recent. The persentry of the fourteenth century were at once more oppressed and more relieved. The aristocracy sometimes tyrannised over them, but never forsook them

In the eighteenth century, a I rench village was a community of prevous, all of whom were poor, ignorant, and coares; its margistrates were as rude and as contenned as the people; its syndic could not read; its collector could not record in his own hundwriting the accounts on which the income of his neighbours and his own depended. Not only had the former lord of the munor lost the right of governing this community, but he had brought himself to consider it a sort of degradation to take any part in the government of it. To assess the failt, to call out the militia, to regulate the forced labour, were service offices, devolving on the syndic. The central power of the State alone took any care of the matter, and as that power was very remote, and had as yet nothing to fear from tha inhabitants of the villages, the only care it took of them was to extract revenue.

Let me show you what a forsaken class of society becomes which no one desires to oppress, but which no one attempts to enlighten or to serve

The heavest burdens which the fendal system had imposed on the rural population had without doubt been withdrawn and mitigrated, but it is not sufficiently known that for these burdens others had been substituted, perhaps more onerous. The peasant had not to endure all the evils endured by his forefuthers, but he supported many hardships which his forefuthers, but he

¹ See Note LIV, Example of the Mischievons Effects of the Pecuniary Rights of the Clergy

The trille had been decupled, almost exclusively at the cost of the peasantry, in the proceding two centuries. And here a word must be said of the manner in which this trx was levied, to show what barbarous laws may be founded and maintained in civilised ages, when the most enlightened men in the nation have no personal interest in changing them.

I find in a confidential letter, written by the Comptroller-General himself, in 1772, to the Intendants, a description of this tax, which is a model of brevity and accuracy. 'The taille,' said that minister, 'arbitrarily assessed, collectively levied as a personal, not a real, tax in the great part of Irance, is subject to continual variations from all the changes which happen every year in the fortunes of the taxpayers.' The whole is in these three phrases It is impossible to depict more ably the evil by which the writer profited.

The whole sum to be paid by each parish was fixed every three years. It perpetually varied, as the minister says, so that no farmer could foresee a year beforehand what he would have to pay in the year following. In the internal economy of each parish any one of the peasants a named by the collector was entrusted with the apportionment of the tax on the rest.

I have said I would explain what was the condition of this collector. Let us take this explanation in the language of the Assembly of the Province of Berri in 1779, a body not liable to suspicion, for it was entirely composed of privileged persons, who paid no taille, and were chosen by the King 'As every one seeks to evade this office of collector, sud this Assembly, 'each person must fill it in turn The levy of the tuille is therefore entrusted every year to a fresh collector, without regard to his ability or his integrity: the preparation of each roll of assessment bears marks. therefore, of the personal character of the officer who makes it The collector stamps on it his own fears, or foibles, or vices How, indeed, could be do better? He is acting in darkness, for who can tell with precision the wealth of his neighbour or the proportion of his wealth to that of another? Nevertheless the ominion of the collector alone is to decide these points, and he is responsible with all his property and even his person for the receipts. He is commonly obliged for two whole years to lose half his days in running after the taxpayers. Those who cannot read are obliged to find a neighbour to perform the office for them.'

Turgot had already said of another province, a short time before, 'This office of collector drives to despair, and generally to rum, those on whom it is imposed, by this means all the we alther families of a vallage are successively reduced to poverty?

This unleappy officer was, however, armed with the most arbitrity powers, I he was almost as much a tyrint as a martyr. Whilst he was discharging functions by which he ruined himself, he had it in his power to ruin every body else. Preference for his relations, to recur to the language of the Provincial Assembly, for for his friends and neighbours, hatred and revenge against his enemies the want of a partion, the fear of illrouting a man of property who had work to give, were at issue with every fiching of justice. Personal fear often hardened the heart of the collector, there were purshes in which he never went out but excerted by constables and bailiffs. (Which he comes without the constable, said an Intendant to a Minister, in 1761, 'the persons hable to the tax will not pay.' In the district of Villefranche alone,' says the Provincial Assembly of Giuenne,' there were one hundred and six officers constantly out to serve write and levy distraints.

To evade this rolent and arbitrary taxtion the French persontry, in the mulst of the eighteenth century, acted like the Jews in the Middle Ages. They were estensibly pulpers, even when ly chance they were not so in reality. They were afruid to be well off, and not without reason, as may be seen from a document which I select not from Gueune, but a hundred leagues off. The Apricultural Society of Maine unnounced in its Report of 1761, that it proposed to distribute cattle by way of prizes and encouragements.

This plan was stopped it adds on account of the dangerous consequences to be apprehended by a low jealousy of the winners of these prizes which by means of the arbitrary assessment of the pullic taxes, would occasion them annoyance in the following year

Under this system of taxation each tax-payer had in fact a direct and permanent interest to act as a spy on his neighbours, and to denounce to the collector the progress of their fortunes. The whole population was thus truned to delation and to latted Were not such things rather to be expected in the domains of a right of Hindostan?

There were however at the same time in France certain districts in which the taxes were raised with regularity and moderation, these were called the paps district the right of levying their own taxes had been left. In Languedoc for example the taille was assessed on real projectly.

¹ See Note LV

^{*} See Note LVI Superior ty of Mell od adopte l in tile Pays I Ltat

and did not vary according to the means of the holder. Its fixed and known basis was a survey which had been carefully made and was renewed every thirty years, and in which the lands were divided, according to their firtility, into three classes Every tax payer knew beforehand exactly what his proportion of the charge amounted to If he fuled to pay, he alone, or rather his land alone, was liable If he thought the asses ment unjust, he might always require that his share should be compared with that of any other inhabitant of the parish, on the principle of what is now termed in France an appeal to proportionate equality

CO LP 711

These regulations are precisely tho ewhich are now followed in France, they have not been improved since that time, but they have been generalised for it deserves observation, that although the form of the public administration in France has been taken from the Government anterior to the Revolution nothing else has been copied from that Government The best of the administra tive forms of proceeding in modern France have been borrowed from the old Provincial Assemblies, and not from the Government The machine was adopted, but its produce rejected The habitual poverty of the rural population had given birth to maxims little calculated to put an end to it 'If nations were well off ' and Richelieu, in his Political Testament, 'hardly would they keep within the rules In the eighteenth century this maxim was modified, but it was still believed that the persantry would not work without the constant stimulus of necessity and that want was the only security against idleness. That is precisely the theors which is sometimes professed with reference to the negro population of the colonie. It was an opinion so generally diffused amonest those who governed that almost all the economists thought themselves obliged to combat it at length is the more singular, when we see the facility with which the conscription works in Trance in the present times

This extreme repugnance of the persontry of Prince before the Revolution to the militia was attributable less to the principle of the law than to the manner in which the law was executed, more especially from the long period of uncertainty, during which it threatened those limble to be drawn (they could be taken until forty years of age, unless they were married)-from the arbitrary power of revision, which rendered the advantage of a lucky number almost useless-from the prohibition to hire a substitute-from disgust at a hard and perilous profession, in which all hope of advancement was forbidden, but, above all, from the feeling that this oppressive burden rested on themselves alone, and on the most wretched amongst themselves, the ignorum of this condition rendering its hardships more intolerable

I have had means of referring to many of the returns of the draft for the militia, as it was made in 1769 in a large number of purishes. In all these returns there are some exemptions this man is a gentlem m's servant, that, the gamekeeper of an abbey , a third is only the valet of a man of inferior birth, but who, at least, 'lives like a noblem in' Wealth alone afforded an exemp tion, when a farmer annually figured amongst those who paid the largest sum in taxes, his sons were dispensed from the militia. that was called encouragement of agriculture. I ven the economists, who in all other points, were great partisans of social equality, were not shocked by thus privilege, they only suggested that it should be extended, or in other words, that the burden of the poorest and most friendless of the peasants should become more severe The low pay of the soldier, and one of these writers, 'the manner in which he is lodged, dressed, and fed and his entire state of dependence, would render it too cruel to take any but a man of the lowest orders

Down to the close of the reign of Louis XIV the high roads were not reprined or were repaired at the cost of those who used them namely the State and the adjacent landowners. But alout that time the roads began to be repaired by forced labour only, that is to say, exclusively at the expense of the persantry ! This expedient for making roads without paying for them was thought so ingenious that in 1737 a circular of the Comptroller General Orry established it throughout France The Intendants were armed with the right of imprisoning the refractory at pleasure, or of sending constables after them 2

See Note IAII., Repart of Roals have regarded
bee Note LVIII Commitments for Non performance of Compulsory Labour

From that time, whenever trade augmented, so that more roads were wanted or desired, the correct or forced labour extended to new lines, and had more work to do It appears from the Report made in 1779 to the Provincial Assembly of Berri, that the works executed by forced labour in that poor province were estimated in one year at 700,000 livres. In 1787 they were computed at about the same sum in Lower Normandy. Nothing can better demonstrate the melancholy fate of the rural population, the progress of society, which enriched all the other classes, drove them to despire, and civilisation itself turned against that class alone.

If find about the same time, in the correspondence of the

CHAP ZII

I find about the same time, in the correspondence of the Intendants, that leave was to be refused to the peasants to do their forced labour on the private roads of their own villages, since this labour was to be reserved to the great high roads only, or, as they were then called, 'the Kings highway'. The strange notion that the cost of the roads was to be defrayed by the poorest persons, and by those who were the least likely to travel by them, though of recent date, took such root in the minds of those who were to profit by it, that they soon imagined that the thing could not be done differently! In 1766 an attempt was made to commute this forced labour into a local rate, but the same inequality survived, and afficted this new species of tax.

required of the persants on the roads, and one of these officers in 1751, 'is such, that they will soon be quite unable to pay the total.'

Could all these new oppressions have been established if there had been in the vicinity of these personts any men of wealth and education, disposed and able, if not to defend them, at least to intercede for them, with that common master who already held in his grass the fortunes of the poor and of the rich?

I have read a letter of a great landowner, writing in 1771 to the Intendant of his province, to induce him to open a road. This road, he said, would cause the prosperity of the village, and for several reasons, he then went on to recommend the establishment of a fur, which would double, he thought, the price of produce With excellent motives, he added that with the assistance of a small contribution a school might be established, which would furnish the King with more industrious subjects. It was the first time that these necessary amchorations had occurred to him, he had only thought of them in the preceding two years which he had been compelled by a lette de cicket to spend in his own house. 'My evile for the last two years in my estates,' he candidly observed, 'has convinced me of the extreme utility of these things.

It was more especially in times of scarcity that the relixation or total interruption of the ties of patronage and dependence, which formerly connected the great rural proprietors and the peacantry was manifest. At such critical times the Central Government, alarmed by its own isolation and weakness sought to revise for the nonce the personal influences or the political associations which the Government itself had destroyed, they were summoned to its aid but they were summoned in vain, and the State was astonished to find that those persons were defunct whom it had itself deprived of the

In this extremity some of the Intendants—Turgot for instance—in the poorest provinces, issued illegal ordinances to compel the fich landowners to feed their tenants till the next harvest. I have found under the date of 1770, letters from several parish priests who propose to the Intendants to tax the great landowners both clerical and lay, 'who possess ust estates which they do not inhabit, and from which they draw large revenues to be spent elsewhere

At all times the villages were infested with beggris, for as Letronne observes the poor were relieved in the towns but in the country, during the winter, mendicity was their only resource

Occasionally these poor wretches were treated with great violence In 1767 the Duc de Choiseul, then Minister, resolved suddenly to suppress mendicity in France The correspondence of the Intendants still shows with what rigour his mensures were taken. The patrol was ordered at once to take up all the beggars found in the kingdom, it is said that more than 50,000 of them were seized Able-bodied vagabonds were to be sent to the galleys, as for the rest, more than forty workhouses were opened to receive them. It would have been more to the purpose to have opened the hearts of the rich

This Government of the ancient French monarchy, which was, as I have said, so mild, and sometimes so timid, so full of formalities, of delays, and of scuiples, when it had to do with those who were placed above the common people, was always harsh and always prompt in proceeding against the lower orders, especially against the peasantry. Amongst the records which I have examined, I have not seen one relating to the arrest of a main of the middle class by order of the Intendant, but the peasants were arrested continually, some for forced labour, some for begging, some for the militia, some by the police or for a hundred other causes. The former class enjoyed independent courts of justice, long trials, and a public procedure; the latter fell under the control of the provost-marshal, summarily and without appeal.

'The immense distance which exists between the common people and all the other classes of society,' Necker wrote in 1785, 'contributes to avert our observation from the manner in which authority may be handled in relation to all those persons lost in a crowd • Without the gentleness and humanity which characterise the French and the spirit of this age, this would be a continual subject of sorrow to those who can feel for others under burdens from which they are themselves exempt celebrated 1 nglish agriculturist in Trunce. They excelled in no profession but in that of arms, there at least they came instarally and necessarily into contact with the other classes.

In this depth of isolation and indigence the I rench peasanty lived, they lived enclosed and inaccessible within it. I have been surprised and almost shocked to perceive that less than twenty years before the Catholic worship was abolished without reast nee in I rance and the churches descrated, the means taken to seer reported the number of persons who had attended at Laster at the I ords talk—no e timate was added for the probable number of children and of the sick, the result gave the whole body of the population. Nevertheless the spirit of the ago had began to penetrate by many ways into these unitatored minds, it penetrated by reregular and hidden channels, and assumed the strangest shapes in their narrow and obscure expected. A tenthing seemed as yet externally changed, the manners, the liabits, the faith of the peasant seemed to be the same, he was submissive, and was even merry.

There is something fall-clous in the inertinent which the Trench often exhibit in the midst of the greatest calemities. It only proves that, believing then ill fortune to be inevitable if eyseek to throw it off by not thinking of it but not that they do not fel it. Open to them a door of escape from the evil they seem to be used in the property of the control of the property of t

These things are clear to us from our point of observation, but they were invisible to contemporary eyes. It is always with great difficulty that men belonging to the upper classes succeed in discerning with precision what is passing in the mind of the common people and espe ally of the peasantry The education and the manner of life of the persantry give them certain views of tifeir own which teman shut to all other classes But when the poor and the rich have scarcely any common interests common grievu ces or common business the darkness which concerls the mund of the one from tle mind of the other becomes in penetrable and the two classes might live for ever side by side without the slightest interpenetration It is curious to observe in what stringe security ill those who inlalited the upper or the raddle storeys of the social edifice were livit g at the very time when the Revoluti n was beginning and to mark how ingeniously to ey discoursed on the virtue of the common people on their gentliness on ther

attrchment to themselves, on their innocent diversions; the absurd and terrible contrast of 93 was already beneath their feet

Let us here pause for a moment as we proceed to consider, amid-t all these minute particulars which I have been describing, one of the greatest laws of Providence in the government of human societies

118

perceived what unknown passions they had kindled-passions which they could neither guide nor control, and which ended by turning the instigators of those passions into their victims

In all future ages the ruins of that great House of France which had seemed destined to extend over the whole of Turope, will be the wonder of mankind, but those who read its history with attention will understand without difficulty its fall. Almost all the vices, almost all the errors, almost all the fatal prejudices I have had occasion to describe, owed either their origin, or their duration, or their extent to the arts practised by most of the kings of France to divide their subjects in order to govern them more absolutely

But when the middle classes were thus thoroughly severed from the nobility, and the peasantry from the nobility, as well as from the middle classes-when, by the progress of the same influences within each class, each of them was internally subdivised into minute bodies, almost as isolated from each other as the classes to which they belonged the result was one homogeneous mass the parts of which no longer cohered Nothing was any longer so organised as to thwart the Government-nothing so as to assist it, insomuch that the whole fabric of the grandeur of the monarchy might fall to pieces at once and in a moment as soon as the society on which it rested was disturbed

And the people, which alone seem to have learnt something from the misconduct and the mistakes of all its masters if indeed it escaped their empire, failed to shake off the false notions the vicious habits the evil tendencies which those masters had imparted to it, or allowed it to assume Sometimes that people has carried the predilections of a slave into the enjoyment of its liberty, all c incapable of self government and hostile to those who would have directed it

I now resume my track and losing sight of the old and

general facts which have prepared the great Revolution I design to paint I proceed to the more particular and more recent inci dents which finally determined its occurrence, its origin, and its

CHAPTER XIII

SHOWING THAT TOWARDS THE MIDDLE OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY MEN OF LETTERS BECAME THE LEADING POLITICAL MEN OF FRANCE, AND OF THE EFFECTS OF THIS OCCURRENCE.

TRINCE had long been the most literary of all the nations of Europe; although her literary men had never exhibited such intellectual powers as they displayed about the middle of the eighteenth century, or occupied such a position as that which they then assumed. Nothing of the kind had ever been seen in Trance, or perhaps in any other country. (They were not constantly mixed up with public affairs as in England: at no period, on the contrary, had they lived more apart from them. They were invested with no anthority whatever, and filled no public offices in a society crowded with public officers; yet they did not, like the greater part of their brethren in Germany, keep entirely aloof from the arena of politics and retire into the regions of pure philosophy and polite literature. They busied themselves incessantly with matters appertaining to government, and this was, in truth, their special occupation.) Thus (they were continually holding forth on the so as to get at the first leading ideas, it may be easily discovered that the authors of these different systems agreed at least more very general notion, which all of them seem to have all e concured, and which appears to have pre-existed in their minds before all the notions peculiar to themselves and to have been their common fountain-head However widely they may have diverged in the rest of their course, they all started from this point. They all agreed that it was expedient to substitute simple and elementary rules, deduced from reason and natural law, for the complicated traditional customs which governed the society of their time) (Upon a strict scrutiny it may be seen that what might be call'd the political philosophy of the eighteenth century consisted, properly speaking, in this one notion) These opinions were by no means novel, for three thousand years they had uncersingly traversed the imaginations of mankind, though without being able to stamp themselves there How come they at last to take possession of the minds of all the writers of this period? Why, instead of progressing no farther than the heads of a few philosophers, as had frequently been the case, had they at last reached the masses, and assumed the strength and the fervour of a political passion to such a degree, that general and abstract theories upon the nature of society became daily topics of conversation, and even inflamed the imaginations of women, and of the peasantry?

BOOK II

How was it that hterary men, possessing neither rank, nor honour, nor fortune, nor responsibility, nor power, became, in fact, the principal political men of the day, and even the only political men in smuch as whilst others held the reins of government, they alone grasped its authority?

no one had attempted either to bring into harmony with each other or to adapt to modern wants, and which appeared likely to perpetuate their existence though they had lost their worth, they learned to abbor what was ancient and traditional, and naturally became desirons of re constructing the social edifice of their day upon an entirely new plant—a plan which each one traced solely by the light of this reason.

Chese writers were predisposed, by their own position, to relish general and obstract theories upon the subject of government, and to place in them the blinds teorific nee J. The almost immensurable distance in which they lived from practical duties afforded them no exprance to moderate the ardour of their character, nothing warned them of the obstacles which the actual state of things might oppose to reforms, however desirable. (They had no idea of the perils which always accompany the most needful revolutions, they had not even a presentiment of them, for the complete absence of all political liberty had the effect of rendering the transaction of public affairs not only unknown to them, but even invisible.) They other remnant of former authority, without perceiving at hand any remedy that he could himself apply to his own particular hardship. It appeared that the whole constitution of the country must either be endured or destroyed)

(The French, however, had still preserved one liberty amidst the ruin of every other they were still free to philosophise almost without restraint upon the origin of society, the essential nature of governments, and the primordial rights of mankind)

governments, and the primordial rights of mankind)

(All those who felt themselves aggreeved by the daily application of existing laws were soon enamoured of these literary politics. The same taste soon reached even those who by nature or by their condition of life seemed the farthest removed from abstract special lations (Every tax payer wronged by the unequal distribution of the taille was fired by the idea that all men ought to be equal, every little landowner devoured by the rabbits of his noble neighbour was delighted to be told that all privileges were, without distinction, contrary to reason. Every public passion thus assumed the disguise of philosophy, all political action was violently driven back into the domain of literature, and the writers of the day undertaking the guidance of public opinion, found themselves at one time in that position which the heads of parties commonly hold in free countries.) No one in First was any longer in a condition to contend with them for the next they had excursed.

tion to contend with them for the part they had assumed (An aristocracy in all its vigour not only carries on the affins of a country, but directs public opinion, gives a tone to literature, and the stamp of authority to ideas, but the I rench nobility of the eighteenth century had entirely lost this portion of its supre macy, its influence had followed the fortunes of its power, and the position it had occupied in the direction of the public mind had been entirely abandoned to the writers of the day, to occupy as they pleased.) Not more this very anistocracy whose place they thus assumed favoured their undertaking. So completely had it forgotten the fact that general theories once admitted, inevitably transform themselves in time into political passions and deeds that doctrines the most adverse to the peculiar rights, and even to the existence of the nobility were looked upon as ingenious exerci es of the mind, the nobles even shared as a pleasant postime in these discussions and quietly enjoyed their immunities and privileges whilst they serenely discussed the absurdity of all established customs Astonishment has frequently been expressed at the singular blindness with which the higher classes under the old monard v of France thus contributed to their own rum) But whence could they sudden transformation of so ancient and complicated a state of society was to be effected, without any concussion, by the aid and efficacy of reason alone; and they fatally forgot that maxim which their forefathers, four hundred years before, had expressed in the simple and energetic language of their time: 'Par requirre de trop grande franchise et libertis chel-on en trop grande servinge' (By requiring too great liberty and franchise, men fall into too great servitude)

It was not surprising that the nobility and middle classes, so long excluded from all public action, should have displayed this strange inexperience; but what astonishes far more is, that the (very men who had the conduct of public affairs, the ministers, the magistrates, and the Intendants, should not have evinced more foresight. Many of them, nevertheless, were very lever men in their profession, and were thoroughly possessed of all the details of the public administration of their time; but in that great science of government, which teaches the comprehension of the general movement of society, the appreciation of what is passing in the minds of the masses, and the foreknowledge of the probable results—they were just as much novices as the people itself. In truth, at so only the services of free institutions that can teach the statesman this principal portion of his art

This may easily be seen in the Memoir addressed by Turgot to the King in 1775, in which, among other matters, he advised his Majesty to summon a representative assembly, freely elected by the whole nation, to meet every year, for six weeks, abont his own person, but to grant it no effective power. His proposal was, that thus assembly should take cognisance of administrative hainessbut never of the government—should offer suggestions rather than express a will—and, in fact, should be commissioned to discuss laws but not to make them. 'In this wise,' said the Memoir, 'the royal power would be enlightened, but not thwarted, and public opinion contented without danger: for these assembles would have no authority to oppose any indispensable operation, and if, which is most improbable, they should not lend themselves to this duty, his Majesty would still be the master to do as he pleases.'

It was impossible to show greater ignorance of the true bearing of such a measure, and of the spirit of the times. It has frequently happened, it is true, that towards the end of a revolutionary period, such a proposal as that made by Turgot has been carried into effect with impunity, and that a shadow of libert) has been granted without the reality. Augustus made the experiment with netually done in the United States than to what was thought at the same time in I rance. Whilst to the rest of Lurope the Revolution of America still only appeared a novel and strange occurrence in I rance it only rendered more pulpable and more striking that which was already supposed to be known. Other countries it estomshed, to I rance it brought more complete conviction. The Americans seemed to have done no more than execute what the literary genius of France had already conceived, they grackie substance of reality to that which the I rench had executed. It was as if I is clon had suddenly found himself in Salentum.

This circumstance so novel in listers, of the whole political cancetton of a great people being formed by its literary men con tributed more than anything portrips to bestow upon the I rench Revolution its peculiar stamp, and to cause those results which are still perceptible

(The writers of the time not only imported their ideas to the people who effected the Revolution, but they give them also their people who effected the Revolution. In the whole nation ended after being so long schooled by them, in the absence of all other leaders and in profound ignoriunce of practical affairs, by catching up the instincts, the turn of nind, the tasts, and even the humours of those who wrote, so that when the time for action come it transported into the airm of politics all the labits of literature.

A study of the history of the I rench Revolution will show that it was carried on precisely in that some spirit which his caused so many abstract books to be written on government (There yas the same uttraction towards general theories, complete systems of legis lation and exact symmetry in the laws—the same contempt of existing facts—the same reliance upon theory—the same love of the original the ingenious and the novel in institutions—the same desire to reconstruct all at once the entire constitution by the rules of logic and upon a single plan rather than seek to amend it in its parts). The spectracle was an aluming one, for this which is a ment in a writer is often a full: in a statemma and the same things which have often caused great books to be written may had to give trevolutions.

(Even the political language of the time caught something of the tone in which the authors spoke it was full of general expressions abstract terms pompions words and literary turns. This style aided by the political passions which it expressed, penetrated through all classes and descended with singular faility even to the lowest.) Considerally before the Revolution the edicts of Louis 128 DECAY OF CHRISTIANITY ON THE CONTINENT BOOK II

CHAPTER XIV

SHOWING HOW IRRELIGION HAD DECOME A GENERAL AND DOWNANT PASSION AMOGET THE FRENCH OF THE EIGHTEENTH CEVILEY, AND WHAT INFLUENCE THIS FACT HAD ON THE CHARACTER OF THE REVOLUTION

729

CHAR THE RELIGION ATTACKED BY THE WRITERS

There the state of things was such as had never occurred before. In other times, established religions had been attacked with violence; but the ardour evinced against them had always taken rise in the zeal inspired by a new faith. Even the false and detestable religions of antiquity had not had either numerous or passionate adversaries until Christianity arose to supplant them; till then they were quietly and noiselessly dving out in doubt and indifference—dving, in fact, the death of religions, by old age. But in France the Christian religion was attacked with a sort of rage, without any attempt to substitute any other belief Continuous and vehement efforts having been made to expel from the soul of man the faith that had filled it, the soul was left empty. A mighty multitude wrought with ardour at this thankless task. That absolute incredulity in matters of religion which is so contrary to the natural instincts of man, and places his soul in so painful a condition, appeared attractive to the masses That which until then had only produced the effect of a sickly languor, began to generate fanaticism and a spirit of propagandism taken refuge in literature, and that the writers of the day had be come the real leaders of the great party which tended to overthrow the social and political institutions of the country

BOOK II

130

This being well understood, the question is altered. We no longer ask in what the Church of that day erred as a religious institution, but how far it stood opposed to the political revolution which was at hand, and how it was more especially irksome to the writers who were the principal promoters of this revolution The Church, by the first principles of her ecclesistical government was adverse to the principles which they were desirous of establishing in civil government. The Church rested principally upon tradition, they professed great contempt for all institutions based upon respect for the past The Church recognised an authority superior to individual reason, they appealed to nothing lut that reason The Church was founded upon a hierarchy they aimed at an entire subversion of ranks To have come to a common understanding it would have been necessary for both sides to have recognised the fact that political society and religious society, being by nature essentially different, cannot be regulated by and logous laws But at that time they were far enough from any such conclusion, and it was fancied that, in order to attack the institutions of the State, those of the Church must be d stroyed

which served as their foundation and their model

and they began by bursting the shackles which pre-sed most closely upon themselves

Moreover the Church appeared to them to be, and wa, in fact the most open and the worst defended side of all the vist edifice which they were assailing. Her stringth had declined at the sime time that the temporal power of the Crown had increased. After baying been first the superior of the temporal powers then their equal she had come down to be their client, and a sort of recipiective had been established between them. The temporal powers hat the Church their maternal force, whilst the Church lent them her moral authority, they caused the Church to be obeyed, the Church caused them to be respected—a dangerous interchange of obligations in times of approaching ryolution and alwars disadvantageous to a power founded not upon constraint but upon faith

Although the Kings of France still called themselves the eldest sons of the Church they fulfilled their obligations towards hr most negligently they evinced far les ardour in her protection than in the defence of their own government. They did not, it is true, permit any direct attack upon her, but they suffered her to be transfixed from a distance by a thousand shafts.

The sort of semi-constraint which was at that time imposed upon the enemies of the Church instead of diminishing their power augmented it. There are times when the restraint imposed on literature succeeds in arresting the progress of opinions, there are others when it accelerates their course, but a species of control similar to that their exercised over the press has invariably augmented it power a hundredfold.

Authors were persecuted enough to excite compassion—not enough to inspire them with terror. They suffered from that kind of uniovance which irritates to opposition not from the heavy toke which crushes. The prosecutions directed assume them, which were almost diwars dilatory, noisy and vain appeared less calculated to present their writing than to excite them to the task. A complete liberty of the press would have been less prejudicial to the Church.

'You consider our intolerance more favourable to the progress of the mind than your unlimited liberty wrote Diderot to David Hume in 1768 D'Holbrich Helvetins Morelet and Sand are not of vour opinion. Let it was the Scotchman who was right, Io possessed the experience of the free country in which he lived. Did not looked upon the matter as a literary man—Hume as a politician.

If the first American who might be met by chance, either in his own country or abroad, were to be stopped and asked whether he considered religion useful to the stability of the laws and the good order of sceiety, he would answer, without heistation, that no civilised society, but more especially none in a state of freedom, can cust without religion. Respect for religion is, in his eyes the greatest guarantee of the stability of the State and of the safety of the community. Those who are ignorant of the science of government know that fact at least. Yet there is not a country in the would where the boldest doctrines of the philosophers of the eighteenth century, on political subjects, have been more adopted than in America. The internative contribution of the community of the press.

As much may be said of the English 1 French irreligious philosophy had been preached to them even before the greater part of the French philosophers were born It was Bolingbroke who set up Volture Throughout the eighteenth century infidelity had celebrated champions in England Able writers and profound thinkers espoused that cause, but they were never able to render it triumphant as in France, masmuch as all those who had anything to fear from revolutions eagerly came to the rescue of the the French society of the day, and who did not look upon the doctrines of French philosophy as false, rejected them as dangerous Great political parties as is always the case in free countries, were interested in attaching their cause to that of the Church, and Bolingbroke himself became the ally of the bishops The clergy, animated by these examples, and never finding itself deserted, combated manfully in its own cause The Church of England, in spite of the defects of its constitution and the abuses of every 1 and that swarmed within it supported the shock victoriously Authors and orators rose within it and applied themselves with ardour to the defence of Christianity The theories hostile to that religion after having been discussed and refuted, were finally rejected by the action of society itself, and without any interference on the part of the Government acquired during the last sixty years has been sufficient to disgust the French with this dangerous literature. It is only necessary to see how much the respect for religion has gradually resumed its sway among the different classes of the nation according as each of them acquired that experience in the rude school of Revolution. The old nobility, which was the most irreligious class before 1789, became the most fervent after 1793 it was the first infected, and the first cured. When the bourgeouse felt itself struck down in its triumph, it begin also, in its turn gridually to revert to religious futh. Lattle by little, respect for religion penetrated to all the classes in which men had anything to loe by popular disturbances, and infidelity disappeared, or at least hid its head more and more, as the fear of revolutions arose

But this was by no means the case at the time immediately preceding the Revolution of 1789. The French had so completely lost all practical experience in the great affairs of mankind, and were so thoroughly ignorant of the part held by religion in the government of empires, that infidelity first established itself in the minds of the very men who had the greatest and most pressing personal interest in keeping the State in order and the people in obedience. Not only did they themselves embrace it, but in their blindness they disseminated it below them. They made imputly the pastime of their vacant existence.

The Church of France, so prolific down to that period in great orators, when she found herself deverted by all those who ought to have riblied by a common interest to her cauve became mate. It seemed at one time that, provided she retained her wealth and her rank, she was ready to renounce her faith

As those who demed the truths of Christianity spoke aloud, and those who still believed held their peace, a state of thingswins the result which has since frequently occurred again in France, not only on the question of religion, but in very different matters. Those who still preserved their ancient belief, fearing to be the only men who still remained faithful to it and more afraid of isolation than of error followed the crowd without partialing its opinions. Thus that which was still only the feeling of a portion of the nation appeared to be the opinion of all and from that very fact, seemed irresistible even to those who had themselves given it this false appearance.

The universal discredit into which every form of religious beheft had fallen, at the pad of the last century, exercised without any doubt the greatest influence upon the whole of the French Revolution: it stamped its character. Nothing contributed more to give its features that terrible expression which they wore.

In seeking to distinguish between the different effects which irreligion at that time produced in France, it may be seen that it was rather by disturbing men's minds than by degrading their hearts, or even corrupting their morals, that it disposed the men of that day to go to such strange excesses.

When religion thus described the souls of men, it did not leave them, as is frequently the case, empty and debilitated. They ware filled for the time with sentiments and ideas that occupied its place, and did not, at first, allow them to be utterly prostrate.

If the I'rench who efficted the Revolution were more incredulous than those of the present day in matters of religion, at least they had one admirable faith which the present generation has not. They had faith in themselves. They never doubted of the prefectibility and power of man: they were burning with enthusiasm for his glory: they believed in his worth. They placed that proud confidence in their own strength which so often leads to error, but without which a people is only capable of servitude: they never doubted of their call to transform the face of society and regenerate the human race. These sentiments and passions became like a sort of new religion to them, which, as it produced some of those great effects which religious produce, kept them from individual selfishness, urgod them on even to self-surfice and heroism, and frequently rendered them Insensible to all those petty objects which prosess the men of the present day.

After a profound study of instory we may still venture to affirm that there never was a revolution, in which, at the commencement, more sincere putriotism, more disinterestedness, more true greatness, were displayed by so great a number of men. The nation then exhibited the principal defect, but, at the same time, the principal ornament, which youth possesses, or rather did possess, namely, inexperience and generosity

Yet irreligion had produced an enormous public evil In most of the great political revolutions, which, up to that period, had appeared in the world, those who had attacked the established laws had respected the creeds of the country; and, in the greater part of the religious revolutions, those who attacked religion made no attempt to change, at one blow, the nature and order of all the established authorities, and to raze to the ground the ancient constitution of the government. In the greatest convulsions of society one point, at least, had remained unshaben.

But in the French Revolution, the religious laws having been abolished at the same time that the civil laws were overthrown, the minds of men were entirely apset they no longer knew either to what to cling, or where to stop, and thus arose a litherto unknown species of revolutionists, who carried their boldness to a pitch of madness, who were surprised by no novelty and arrested by no scruple, and who never hesitated to put any design whatever into execution. Nor must it be supposed that these new beings have been the colated and ephemeral creation of a moment and destined to pass away as that moment passed. They have since formed a race of beings which has perpetuated itself, and spir of unto all the culised parts of the world, everywhere preserving the same physiognomy, the same passions, the same character. The present generation found it in the world at its birth at still remains before our eyes.

tion, were announced beforehand by these economical writers, and ardently recommended, there is hardly one of these institutions of which the germ may not be discovered in some of their writings, and those writings may be said to contain all that is most substantial in the Revolution itself

Nay, more, their books already bore the stamp of that revolutionary and democratic temper which we know so well they breathe not only the hatred of certain privileges, but even diversity was odious to them, they would adore equality, even in servitude All that thwarts their designs is to be crushed. They care little for plighted futh, nothing for private rights—or rather, to specific accurately, private rights have already cerved in their eyes to exist—public utility is everything. Yet these were men, for the most part, of gentle and peaceful lives, worthy persons upright magistrates, able administrators, but the peculiar spirit of their task bore them onwards.

The past was to these economists a subject of endless contempt. This ration has been governed for centuries on false principles, and Letronne, 'everything seems to have been done by haphazard' Starting from this notion, they set to work, no institution was cancient or so well-established in the listory of France that they he-strided to demand its suppression from the moment that it incommoded them or derunged the symmetry of their plans. One of these writers proposed to obliftrate at once all the ancient territorial divisions of the kingdom, and to change all the names of the provinces, forty years before the Constituent Assembly executed this scheme

They had already conceived the idea of all the social and administrative reforms which the Revolution has accomplished before the idea of free institutions had begun to cross their minds They were, indeed, extremely favourable to the free exchange of produce, and to the doctrine of lause, faire et laisse passer, the basis of free trade and free labour, but as for political liberties, properly so called, these did not occur to their minds, or if pelchance they did occur to their imaginations, such ideas were at once rejected Most of them began to display considerable hostility to deliberative assemblies to local or secondary powers, and, in general, to all the checks which have been established, at different times, in all free nations, to balance the central power of the Government 'The system of checks sud Quesnay, 'is a fatal iden in government. 'The speculations on which a system of checks has been devised are chimerical,' said a friend of the same 'The speculations on which a system of writer milities, and they checked rather than advanced the progress of societ. The Parliaments, which alone stood in her of political bodies, had no power to prevent the cuil which the Government did, and frequently prevented the good which the Government attempted to do

To accomplish the revolution which they contemplated by means of all these antiquated instruments appeared impreciable to the school of economists. To confide the execution of their plans to the nation, mistress of herself, was not more agreeable to them, for how was it possible to cause a whole people to adopt and follow a system of reform so extensive and so closely connected in all its parts? It seemed to them more easy and more proper to make the administrative power of the Crown itself the instrument of their designs.

That new administrative power had not sprung from the institutions of the Middle Ages, nor did it bear the mark of that period, in spite of its errors they discovered in it some beneficial tendencies. Lake themselves it was naturally favourable to equality of conditions and to uniformity of rules, as much as themselves it condulty detected all the ancient powers which were born of feudalism or tended to aristocracy. In all Lurope no machine of government custed so well organised so nast, or so strong. To find such a government ready to their hands seemed to them a most fortunate circumstrance, they would have called it providential, if it had been the fashion then, as it now is to cause Providence to intervene on all occasions. 'The state of Tipince, said Letronne,' is infinitely better than that of Englands for here reforms can be accomplished which will change the whole condition of the country in a moment, whilst among the whole condition of the country in a moment, whilst among the English such reforms may always be thewrited by political parties

The point was, then not to destroy this absolute power, but to convert it "The State must govern according to the rules of es ential order, said Merciere de la Rivière, 'and when this is the case it ought to be all powerful." Let the State thoroughly understund its duty, and then let it be altogether free. From Quesnay to the Abbe Bodeau they were all of the same mind. They not only relied on the royal administration to reform the social condition of their own age but they partially borrowed from it the idea of the future government they hoped to found. The latter was framed in the image of the former.

These economists held that it is the business of the State not only to command, the nation, but to fashion it in a certain manner, to form the character of the population upon a certain preconceived model, to inspire the mind with such opinions and the heart with such sentiments as it may deem necessary. In fact, they set no limits to the rights of the State, nor to what it could effect. The State was not only to reform men, but to transform them—perhaps if it chose, to make others! 'The State can make men what it pleases, said Bodean. That proposition includes all their theories.

This unlimited social power which the French economists land conceived was not only greater than any power they ever beheld, but it differed from every other power by its origin and its nature. It did not flow directly from the Deity, it did not rest on tradition, it was an impersonal power, it was not called the King, but the State, it was not the inheritance of a family, but the product and the representance of all. It entitled them to bend the right of every man to the will of the rest.

That peculiar form of tyrunny which is called Democratic Despotism, and which was ulterly unknown to the Middle Ages, was already familiar to these writers. No gradations in society, no distinctions of classes, no fixed runks—a people composed of individuals nearly alike and entirely equal—this confused mass being recognised as the only legitimate sovereign, but carefully deprived of all the faculties which could enable it either to direct or even to superintend its own government. Above this mass a single officer charged to do everything in its name without consulting it. To control this officer, public opinion, deprived of its organs, to arrest luin, revolutions, but no laws. In principle, a subordinate agent, in fact, a master.

It is supposed that the distructive theories which are designated in our times by the name of or alism are of recent origin. This a mistake, these theories are contemporary with the first I rench school of economists. Whilst they were intent on employing the all powerful government they had conceived in order to change the form of society, other writers grasped in imagination the same power to subvert its found itims.

In the Cole de la Nature by Morelly, will be found side by sile with the doctrines of the economists on the ominipatence and unlimited rights of the State several of the political theories which have most alarmed the French nation in these later times and which are supposed to have been form before our eyes—community of goods the right to labour, absolute equality of conditions unformity in all things a mechanical regularity in all the morements of individuals a tyrainy to regulate every action of duly life and the complete absorption of the personality of each member of the community into the whole social lody

"Nothing in society shall belong in singular property to any one every the first article of this code." Property is detectable and whosever shall attempt to re-estable at it shall be slit up for life as a manne or an enemy of mankind. Every citizen is to be supported maintained and employed at the public expense says Article II. All productions use to be stored in public magazines to be distributed to the citizens and to supply their duly wants. Towns will be erected on the same plan all private dwellings or buildings will be allie at five years of age all children will be taken from their premiss and brought up in common at the cost of the State and in a uniform manner.

Such a book might have been written yesterday it is a hundred

Such a book might have been written yesterday it is a hundred years old It appeared in 1755 at the very time when Quesnav founded his school. So true it is that centralisation and socialism are products of the same soil they are to each other what the crafted tree is to the wild stock.

Of all the nen of the r time these economists are tiose who would appear most at home in our own. If her pies on for equality is so strong and their traste for freedom is so quest onable that one might fancy they are our conten poraries. In reading the speeches and the books of the men who figured in the Revolution of 1789 we are suddenly transported into a place and a state of society quite unknown to us, but in permang the books of this school of economists one may fancy we have been living with these people and have just been talking with them

About the year 1700 the whole French nation would not have freedom had perished with the use of it. The nation desired reform rather than rights, and if there had been at that time on the throne of Irance a sovereign of the energy and the character of I rederick the Great, I doubt not that he would have accomplished in society and in government many of the great changes which have been brought about by the Revolution, and this not only without the loss of his crown, but with a considerable augmentation of his power. It is said that one of the ablest ministers of Louis XV M de Machault, had a glimpse of this idea, and imparted it to his master, but such undertakings are not the result of advice to be able to perform them a man must have been able to conceive the economists themselves The taste and even the notion of them Twenty years later the state of things was changed A vision of political freedom had visited the mind of France and was every day becoming more attractive as may be inferred from a variety of symptoms The provinces began to conceive the desire to manage once more their own affairs. The notion that the whole people has a right to take part in the government diffused itself and took possession of the public Recollections of the old States General were revived The nation which detested its own history, recalled no other part of it with pleasure but this. This fresh current of opinion bore away the economists themselves, and compelled them to encumber their unitarian system with some free institutions

142

When in 1771 the Parliaments were destroyed, the same public which had so often suffered from their prejudices was deeply affected by their fall. It seemed as if with them fell the last barrier which could still restrain the arbitrary power of the Crown

143

if better to serve under a hon born of a good family, and who is by birth much stronger than I am, than under two hundred rats of my own condition' And he adds by way of excuse. Remember that I am bound to appreciate highly the favour the King has conferred on all the lords of manors, by undertaking to pay the expenses of their jurisdictions'

Volture, who had long been absent from Paris imagined that public opinion still remained at the point where he had left it But he was mistaken The French people no longer confined themselves to the desire that their affairs should be better conducted, they began to wi h to conduct their affairs themselves and it was n unifest that the great Revolution, to which everything was con tributing would be brought about not only with the assent of the people, but by their hands

From that moment, I believe that this radical Revolution, which was to confound in common ruin all that was worst and all that was best in the institutions and condition of France, became mevitable A people so ill prepared to act for themselves could not undertake a universal and simultaneous reform without a universal destruction. An absolute sovereign would have been a less dangerous innovator For myself, when I reflect that this same Revolution which destroyed so many institutions opinions and habits adverse to freedom also destroyed so many of those things without which freedom can hardly exist, I incline to the belief that had it been wrought by a despot it would perhaps have left the French nation less unfit one day to become a free people than wrought as it was by the sovereignty of the people and by the people themselves

What has here been said must never be lost sight of by those who would understand the history of the French Revolution

When the love of the French for political freedom was awakened they had already conceived a cert un number of notions on matters of government which not only did not readily ally themselves with the existence of free institutions but which were almost contract to them

They had accepted as the ideal of society a people having no aristocracy but that of its public officers a single and all powerful administration directing the affairs of State protecting those of private persons. Meaning to be free they by no means meant to deviate from this first conception only they attempted to reconcile it with that of freedom

They theref re undertook to combine an unlimited administrative centralisation with a preponderating legislative body-the administration of a binequency with the government of electors. The nation as a whole had all the rights of sovereights, each either taken singly was thrust into the structest dependence, the former was expected to display the experience and the virtues of a free people—the latter the qualities of a futhful servant.

This desire of introducing political freedom in the midst of institutions and opinions essentially alien or adverse to it but which were already established in the habits or sanctioned by the taste of the I rench themselves is the main cause of the abortive attempts at free government which have succeeded each other in France for more than sixty years, and which have been followed by such disastrous revolutions, that weined by so many efforts, disgusted by so laborious and so sterile a worl alreadoung their second intentions for their original aim, many I renchmen have arrived at the conclusion that to live as equals under a master is after all not without some clears. Thus it is that the I reach of the present day are infinitely more similar to the Economists of 1750 than to their fathers in 1789.

I have often asked myself what is the source of that passion for political facedom which in all ages has been the fruitful mother of the greatest things which mankind have achieved—and in what feelings that passion strilles root and finds its nourishment

It is evident that when nations are ill directed they soon conceive the wish to govern illemsches but this love of independence which only springs up under the influence of certinitiansient evils produced by despotism is never lasting it prisses away with the accelent that gave use to it, and what seemed to be the love of freedom was no more than the hatted of a master That which intuous made to be free really hate is the curse of dependence

Nor do I believe that the true love of freedom is ever born of the mere aspect of its material advantages for this aspect may frequently happen to be overcast. If is very true that in the long fun freedom ever brings to those who know how to keep it, ease, cymfort and often wealth but there are times at which it disturbs for a season the possess on of these blessings, there are other times when despotism alone can confer the ephemeral empoyment of them. The men who prize freedom only for such things as these are not men who ever long preserved it

That which at all times has so strongly attached the affection of certa n men is the attraction of freedom itself its native charms independent of its gifts—the pleasure of speaking acting and breathing without restraint under no master but God and the law. He who seeks in freedom aught but herself is fit only to serve

CRAP XV

There are nations which have indefatigably pursued her through every sort of peril and hard hip. They loved her not for her material gifts, they regard herself as a gift so precious and so necessary that no other could console them for the loss of that which consoles them for the loss of everything else. Others grow werry of freedom in the midst of their prosperities, they allow her to be snatched without resistance from their hands le t they should sacrifice by an effort that well-being which she had bestowed upon them. For them to remain free, nothing was wanting but a taste for freedom I attempt no analysis of that lofty sentiment to those who feel it not. It enters of its own accord into the large hearts God has prepared to receive it, it fills them, it enraptures them, but to the meaner minds which have never felt it, it is past finding out

CHAPITR XVI

SHOWING THAT THE REIGN OF 1015 AVI WAS THE MOST PRO-SERROLS FROCH OF THE OLD FRINCH MONARCHY, AND HOW THIS VERY TROSLERIY ACCELERATED THE REVOLUTION

Ir cannot be doubted that the exhaustion of the kingdom under Louis XIV began long before the reverses of that monarch first indication of it is to be perceived in the most glorious years of his reign I rance was ruined long before she had ceased to Vauban left behind him an alarming essay on the administrative statistics of his time. The Intendants of the provinces, in the reports iddressed by them to the Duke of Burgundy at the close of the seventeenth century, and before the disastrous War of the Spinish Succession had begun, all alluded to the gradual decline of the nation, and they speak of it not as a very recent occurrence 'The population has considerably docreased in this district,' says one of them 'This town, formerly so rich and flourishing, is now without employment,' says another Or again 'There have been manufactures in this province, but they are now abandoned, or, 'The furners formerly rused much more from the soil than they do at present, agriculture was in a far better condition twenty years ago' 'Population and production have diminished by about one fifth in the last thirty years, said an Intendent of Orleans at the same period. The perusal of these reports might be recommended to those persons who are favourable to absolute government, and to those princes who are fond of war

As these hardships had their chief source in the evils of the constitution the death of Louis XIV, and even the restoration of peace did not restore the prosperity of the nation. It was the general opinion of all those who wrote on the art of government or on social equium, in the first half of the eighteenth century, that the provinces were not recovering themselves, many even thought that their ruin was progressive. Paris alone they said grows in wealth and in extent. Intendants extinuities, and men of business were of the same opinion on this point as men of letters.

For myself, I confess that I do not believe in this continuous decline of France throughout the first half of the eighteenth century, but an opinion so generally entertained amongst persons so well informed, proves at least that the country was making at that time no visible progress. All the administrative records connected with this period of the listory of France which have fallen under my observation denote, indeed, a sort of lethargy in the community. The government continued to resolve in the orbit of routine without inventing any new thing, the towns made scarcely an effort to rander the condition of their inhabitants more confortable or more wholesome, even in private life no considerable enterprise was set on foot.

About thirty or forty years before the Revolution brol e out the scene began to change. It seemed as if a sort of inward perturbation, not remarked before, tirilled through the scene frame. At first none but a most attentive eye could discern it, but gradually this movement become more characterised and more distinct. Year by year it gained in rapidity and in extent, the nation stirs, and seems about to rise once more. But, beware! It is not the old life of France which is animates her. The breath of a new life pervides the mighty body, but pervides it only to complete its dissolution. Restless and agrirted in their own condition, all classes are struing for something else, to better that condition is the universal desire, but this desire is so feveral and wayward that it leads men to curse the past, and to conceive a state of society altogether the reverse of that which hes before them.

Nor was it long before the same spirit penetrated to the heart of the Government. The Government was thus internally transformed without any external alteration, the laws of the langdom were unchanged but they were differently applied.

It have elsewhere remarked that the Comptrollers General and the Intendents of 1760 had no resemblance to the same officers in 1780. The correspondence of the public offices demonstrates this fact in detail. Yet the Intendent of 1780 had the same powers, the same agents the same urbitrary authority as his predecessor, but not the same purposes the only care of the former was to keep 1 is province in a state of obedience to ruse the militia, above all to collect the taxes the latter has very different views his head is full of a thousand schemes for the augmentation of the wealth of the nation. Roads, canals a nanufactures commerce are the chief of exist of his thoughts, agriculture more justices.

ticularly attracts his notice. Sully came into fishion amongst the administrators of that ago

Then it was that they began to form the agricultural sociatios, which I have already mentioned, they established exhibitions, they distributed prizes. Some of the circulars of the Comptrollers-General were more like treatises on husbandry than official correspondence.

In the collection of all the taxes the change which had come over the mind of the governing body we seep calls perceptible. The existing law was still unfair, arbitrary and harsh, as it had long been, but all its defects were intigated in the application of it.

'When I beg in to study our fixed laws,' says M Mollien,' in his Memoirs, 'I was terrified by what I found there fines, imprisonment, corporal punishment, were placed at the disposal of exceptional courts for mere oversights, the clarks of the resenue farms had almost all property and persons in their power, subject to the discretion of their ouths. I ortinately I did not confine myself to the mere perival of this code, and I soon had occasion to find out that between the text of the law and its application there was the same difference as between the manners of the old and the new race of funcioners'

The collection of taxes may undoubtedly give rise to infinite abuses and annoyances, and the Provincial Assembly of Lower Normandy in 1787, we must, however, do justice to the gentleness and consideration with which these powers have been excreised for some years past

The examination of public records fully bears out this assertion. They frequently show a genuine respect for the life and liberty of man and more especially a sincere commisseration for the sufferings of the poor, which before would have been sought for in vain Acts of violence committed by the fiscal officers on papers had become rare remissions of taxation were more frequent, relief more abundant. The King augmented all the funds intended to establish workshops of charity in the rarial districts, or to assist the indigent, and he often founded new ones. Thus more than

[Count Moll en was educated a the fiscal service of the old monarely and after ha agreecaged the pends of the Re old on he be came M as ster of the Re old on he be tame M as ster of the Treas ry to the Emperor Napoleon and unler the Pestoration a Peer of France He left Memours of his Administration which have been printed for private circulation by his willow the es mixable Countees Molline in four

columes octave be took yet published. These Memors are a most 1 of per onal untegrity and financial judgment the more remarkable as it that fate of the columns of the fate of the columns of the columns

80 000 hvres were distributed by the State in this manner in the district of Upper Guienne alono in 1770, 40 000 in 1781 in that of Tours, 18 000 in that of Normandy in 1787. Louis XVI did not leave this portion of the duties of government to his Ministers only, he sometimes took it upon himself. When in 1776, and either of the Grown fixed the compensation due to the personative whose filled were desistated by the King's game in the neighbourhood of the Royal seats and established a simple and certain method of enforcing the payment of it the King himself days the premible of the decree. Turgot it lates that this virtuous and unfortunate Prince I anded the paper to him with these words. You see that I too lave been at work. If we were to pourtray the Government of the old I runch monarchy such as it was in the last years of its existence, the image would be too highly flattered and too milks the reality.

As thes changes were brought about in the rainds of the governing class and of the governed the prosperity of the nation expanded with a rapidity heretofor, unknown I two announced by numerous symptoms the population largely augmented, the wealth of the country augmented more largely still. The American War did not a rrest this movement the State was emburrassed by it, but the community continued to enrich itself by becoming more industrious more enterprising more inventive.

'Since 1771 says one of the members of the administration of that time 'different kinds of industry have by their extension enlarged the area of traxition on all commod tres. If we compare the terms of arrangement agreed upon at different periods of the reign of Louis XVI between the State and the financial companies which furmed the public revenue the rate of priment will be found to have ris in at each ren wall with increasing rapidity. The firm of 1786 produced fourteen millions more than that of 1780. It may be reckoned that the produce of duties on consumption is increasing at the rate of two millions per annula, said becker in his Report of 1781.

Arthur Young decland that in 1788 Bordeaux carried on a larger trade than Laverpool He alds Latterly the progress of maritime commerce has been more rap d in France than in England, trade las do ibled there in the last twenty years

With due regard to the difference of the times we are speaking of it may be established that in no one of the periods which have followed the Revolution of 1789 has the national prosperity of France augmented more ripidly than it did in the twenty years preceding that event. The period of thirty-seven years of the constitutional monarchy of Prance, which were times of peace and progress, can alone be compared in this respect to the reign of Louis XVI.

The aspect of this prosperity, already so great and so rapidly increasing, may well be matter of surprise, if we think of all the defects which the Government of France still included, and all the restrictions against which the industry of the nation had still to contend Perhaps there may be politicians who, unable to explain the fact, deny it, being of the opinion of Molière's physician that a patient cannot recover against the rules of art. How are we to believe that I rance prospered and grew rich with unequal taxation, with a diversity of customary law, with internal custom-houses, with feudal rights, with guilds, with purchased offices, &c.? In spite of all this, I'mce was beginning to grow rich and expand on every side, because within all this clumsy and ill-regulated machinery, which seemed calculated to check rather than to impel the social engine, two simple and powerful springs were concealed, which, already, sufficed to keep the fabric together, and to drive it along in the direction of public prosperity -a Government which was still powerful enough to maintain order throughout the kingdom, though it had ceased to be despotic; a nation which, in its upper classes, was already the most enlightened and the most free on the continent of Europe, and in which every man could enrich himself after his own fashion and preserve the fortune he had once acquired

The King still spoke the language of an arbitrary ruler, but in reality he himself obeyed that public opinion which inspired or influenced him day by day, and which he constantly consulted, flattered, feared, absolute by the letter of the laws, limited by their application. As early as 1784, Necker said in a public document as a thing not disputed. Most foreigners are unable to form an idea of the authority now exercised in France by public opinion, they can hardly understand what is that invisible power which makes itself obeyed even in the King's palace; yet such is the fact.

Nothing is more superficial than to attribute the greatness and the power of a people exclusively to the mechanism of its laws; for, in this respect, the result is obtained not so much by the perfection of the engine as by the amount of the propelling power. Lool at England, whose administrative laws still at the present day appear so much more complicated, more anomalous, more mouths of that river, in the marshes of Poiton and the heaths of

Brittany Yet there it was that the fire of civil war was kindled and kept alive, and that the fiercest and longest resistance was opposed to the Revolution, so that it might be said that the Trench found their position the more intolerable the better it

152

Surprising as this fact is, history is full of such contradictions It is not always by going from bad to worse that a country falls into a revolution It happens most frequently that a people, which had supported the most crushing laws without complaint, and apparently as if they were unfelt, throws them off with violence as soon as the burden begins to be diminished. The state of things destroyed by a revolution is almost always somewhat better than that which immediately preceded it, and experience has shown that the most dangerous moment for a bad government is usually that when it enters upon the work of reform Nothing short of great political gentius can save a sovereign who undertakes to relieve his subjects after a long period of oppression The evils which were endured with patience so long as they were mevitable seem intolerable as soon as a hope can be entertained of escaping from them The chases which are removed seem to lay bare those which remain, and to render the sense of them more scute, the evil has decreased, it is true, but the perception of the evil is more Teudalism in all its strength had not inspired as much aversion to the French as it did on the eve of its disappearance The slightest arbitrary proceedings of Louis AVI seemed more hard to bear than all the despotism of Louis XIV! The brief detention of Beaumarchais produced more excitement in Paris than the Dragonnades

158 FINANCIAL FABARRASSMENTS CHAP XVI ab-olute government As the financial department was secret and uncontrolled, many of the worst practices which had prevailed under Louis XIV and Louis XV were still followed. The very efforts which the Government made to augment the public prosperity-the relief and the rewards it distributed-the public works it caused to be executed—continually increased the expenditure without adding to the revenue in the same proportion. hence the King was continually thrown into embarrissments greater than those of his predecessors. Like them, he left his creditors unpaid, like them, he borrowed in all directions, but without publicity and without competition, and the creditors of the Crown were never sure of receiving their interest, even their capital was always at the mercy of the sovercion been so much intermingled. The mismanagement of the public finances, which had long been no more than a public evil, thus became to a multitude of families a private calamity. In 1789 the State was indebted nearly 600 millions of france to creditors who were almost all in debt themselves, and who inoculated with their own dissatisfaction against the Government all those whom the irregularity of the public Treasury caused to participate in their embarrassments. And it must be observed, that as malcontents of this class became more numerous, they also became more exasperated; for the love of speculation, the thirst for wealth, the taste for comfort, having grown and extended in proportion to the business transacted, the same evils which they might have endured thirty years before without complaint now appeared altogether insupportable. Hence it arose that the fundholders, the traders, the manufacturers, and other persons engaged in business or in monetary affairs, who generally form the class most hostile to political innovation, the most friendly to existing governments, whatever they may be, and the most submissive to the laws even when they despise and detest them, were on this occasion the class most eager and resolute for reform. They loudly demanded a complete revolution in the whole system of finance, without reflecting that to touch this part of the Government was to cause every other part to fall.

How could such a catastrophe be averted? On the one hand, a nation in which the desire of making fortunes extended every day-on the other, a Government which incessantly excited this passion, which agitated, inflamed, and beggared the nation, driving by either path on its own destruction their sole resource against wint and hunger, because they are made to labour for the profit of the rich'

156 THEIR GRIEVANCES DENOUNCED BY THE KING BOOK II

When, at the same period, an attempt was made to abolish the restrictions which the system of trading companies or guilds imposed on artisans it was proclaimed, in the King's name, 'that the right to work is the most sucred of all possessions, that every law by which it is infringed violates the natural rights of man, and is null and void in itself, that the existing corporations are more over grotesque and tyrannical institutions, the result of selfshiress, avarice and violence' Such words as these were dangerous, no doubt, but, what was infinitely more so, was that they were spoken in vain. A few months later the corporations and the system of compulsory labour were aguin established.

It is said that Turgot was the Minister who put this language into the King s mouth, but most of Turgot's successors much him hold no other. When, in 1780, the King announced to his subjects that the increase of the taille would, for the future, be subject to public registration he took care to add by way of commentary. Those persons who are subject to the taille, besides being haras ed by the vexations incident to its collection have likewise littlerto been exposed to unexpected augmentations of the tax insomneh that the contributions paid by the poorest part of our subjects have increased in a much greater proportion than those paid by all the rest. When the King, not yet venturing to place all the public burdens on an equal footing, attempted at least to estallish equality of taxation in those which were already imposed on the middle class he said 'His Myesty hopes that rich per-ons will not consider themselves aggreered by being placed on the common level and made to bear their part of a burden which they ought long since to have shared more compile.

leter and made to near their parts of a buttlet where the long since to have shared more equally abut it was above all at periods of scircity that nothing was left untried to inflame the passions of the people far more than to provide for their wants. In order to stimulate the charity of the fich one Intendant talked of the injustice and insensibility of those landowners who ove all they possess to the labours of the poor and who let them die of hunger at the very moment they are toiling to augment the returns of landed property. The King, too thus expressed lumelf on a similar occasion. His Majesty is determined to defend the people against manageures which exposite them to the want of the richt need follow forcing them to give their labour at any price that the rich choose to bestom. The King will not suffer one part of his subjects to be sacrificed to the adults of the other.

Until the very end of the monarchy the strife which subsisted among the different administrative powers gave occasion for all sorts of demonstrations of this kind; the contending parties readily imputed to each other the miseries of the people. A strong m-stance of this appeared in the quarrel which arose, in 1772, between the Parliament of Toulouse and the King, with reference to the transport of grain. 'The Government, by its bad measures, places the poor in danger of dying of hunger,' said the Parliament. 'The ambition of the Parliament and the avidity of the rich are the cause of the general distress,' retorted the King. Thus both the parties were endeavouring to impress the minds of the common people with the belief that their superiors are always to blame for their sufferings.

These things are not contained in the secret correspondence of the time, but in public documents which the Government and the Parliaments themselves took care to have printed and published by thousands. The King took occasion incidentally to tell very harsh truths both to his predecessors and to himself. 'The treasure of the State,' said he on one occasion, 'has been burdened by the lavish expenditure of several successive reigns. Many of our inalienable domains have been granted on leases at nominal rents' On another occasion he was made to say, with more truth than prudence, 'The privileged trading companies mainly owed their origin to the fiscal avidity of the Crown' Farther on, he remarked that 'if useless expenses have often been incurred, and if the taille has increased beyond all bounds, it has been because the Board of Finance found an increase of the taille the easiest resource inasmuch as it was claudestine, and was therefore employed, although many other expedients would have been less burdensome to our people '1

All this was addressed to the enlightened part of the nation in order to convince it of the utility of certain measures which private interests rendered unpopular. As for the common people, it was assumed that if they listened they did not understand

It must be admitted that at the bottom of all these charitable feelings there remained a strong bias of contempt for these wretched beings whose miseries the higher classes so sincerely wished to relieve and that we are somewhat reminded, by this display of compassion, of the notion of Madame Duchitelet, who, as Voltaire's secretary tells us, did not scruple to underess herself before her attendants, not thinking it by any means proved that lackeys are men. And let it not be supposed that Louis XVI.

or his ministers were the only persons who held the dangerous language which I have just cited, the privileged p reons who were about to become the first objects of the popular fury, expressed themselves in exactly the same manner before their inferiors. It must be admitted that in I rance the higher classes of society had begun to pay attention to the condition of the poor before they had any reson to four them, they interested themselves in their fate at a time when they had not begun to believe that the sufferings of the poor were the precursors of their own perdition. This premainly visible in the ten years which preceded 1789, the personals were the constant objects of compassion, their condition was continually discussed, the means of affording them relief were examined, the chief abuses from which they suffered were exposed, and the fiscal laws which pressed most heavily upon them were condemned, but the manner in which this new-born sympithy was expressed was as imprudent as the long continued insensibility which had preceded it

If we read the reports of the Provincial Assemblies which met in some parts of I rance in 1779, and subsequently throughout the kingdom, and if we study the other public records left by them we shall be touched by the generous sentiments expressed in them, and astonished at the wonderful imprudence of the language in which they are expressed

The Provincial Assembly of Lower Normandy sud, in 1787, We have too frequently seen the money destined by the King for roads serve only to increase the prosperity of the rich without any benefit to the people. It has often been employed to embellish the approach to a country manuson instead of making a more convenient entrance to a town or vallage? In the same assembly the Orders of nobility and clergy after descriling the abuses of compulsory labour spontaneously offered to contribute out of their own funds 50 000 haves towards the improvement of the roads in order as they said that the roads of the province might be made spracticable without any further cost of the people. It would probably have cost these privileged classes less to abolish the conpulsory system and to substitute for it a general tax of which they should pay their quots but though willing to give up the profit derived from inequality of taxation they laked to maintain the appearance of the privilege. While they gave up that part of their lights which was profitable, they carefully retained that which was oldous.

Other assemblies composed entirely of landowners exempt from the taille and who fully intended to continue so, nevertheless depicted in the darkest colours the hardships which the taillo inflicted on the poor. They drew a frightful picture of all its abuses, which they circulated in all directions But the most singular part of the affair is that to these strong marks of the interest they felt in the common people, they from time to time added public expressions of contempt for them. The people had already become the object of their sympathy without having ceased to be the object of their dadain.

The Provincial Assembly of Upper Guienne, speaking of the peasants whose cause they so warmly pleaded, called them course and innorant creatures, turbulent spirits, and rough and intactable characters. Turgot, who did so much for the people, seldom spoke of them otherwise.

These harsh expressions were used in acts intended for the greatest publicity, and meant to meet the eyes of the peasants themselves. It seemed as though the framers of them imagined that they were living in a country like Galicia, where the higher classes speak a different language from the lower, and cannot be understood by them. The feudalists of the eighteenth century, who frequently displayed towards the ratepayers and others who owed them feudal services, a disposition to indulgence, moderation, and justice, unknown to their predecessors, still spoke occasionally of 'vile peasants.' These insults seem to have been 'in proper form,' as the lawvers say.

The nearer we approach towards 1789, the more lively and imprudent does this sympathy with the hardships of the common people become. I have held in my hands the circulars addressed by several Provincial Assemblies in the very beginning of 1788 to the inhabitants of the different parishes, calling upon them to state in detail all the grievances of which they might have to complain.

One of these circulars is signed by an abbé, a great lord, three nobles, and a man of the middle class, all members of the Assembly, and acting in its name. This committee directed the Syndic of each parish to convoke all the peasants, and to inquire of them what they had to say against the manner in which the various taxes which they paid were assessed and collected. 'We are generally aware,' they say,' that most of the tixes, especially the galetle and the taille, have diseatous consequences for the cultivators, but we are anxious to be acquainted with every single abiase'. The currosity of the Provincial Assembly did not stop there, it investigated the number of persons in the parish enjoying any privileges with respect to taxes, whether nobles, ecclesiastics, or noturiers, and the precise nature of these privileges, the value of the property of those thus exempted, whether or not they resided on their estates, whether there was much Church property, or, as the phrase then was, land in mortmain, which was out of the mirket, and its value All this even was not enough to satisfy them, they wanted to be told the share of duties, taille, additional dues, poll-tax, and forced labour-rate which the privileged class would have to pay, supposing equality of taxation existed This was to inflame every man individually by the catalogue of his own grievances, it pointed out to him the authors of his wrongs emboldened him by showing him how few they were in number, and fired his heart with cupidity, envy, and hatred It seemed as if the Jacquerie, the Maillotins, and the Sixteen were totally forgotten, and that no one was aware that the French people, which is the quietest and most kindly disposed in the world, so long as it remains in its natural frame of mind, becomes the most barbarous as soon as it is roused by violent passions

1 See Note LXXI., Manner in which Turgot spoke of the Country People.

Unfortunately I have not been able to procure all the returns them

sent in by the persants in reply to these fatal questions, but I have found enough to show the general spirit which periaded can be secure from their firecty. The collectors are forced to ruin their neighbours in order to avoid exposing then selves to the voracity of these despots

CLAP XVII

The Revolution not only annot nees its approach in this inquiry it is already there speaking its own proper language and showing

its face with out disguise

Amid all the differences which exist between the religious Revolution of the sixteenth century and the French Revolution of the eighteenth one contrast is neculiarly striking in the sixteenth century most of the gre t nobles changed their religion from motives of ambition or cipidity the people on the contrary from conviction and without any hope of profit. In the eighteenth century the reverse was the case disinterested convictions and incited them to revolution while a bitter feeling of their wrongs generous sympath es then againted the enlightened classes and and an ardent desire to alter their position excited the common people The enthusuasm of the former put the last stroke to inflaming and arming the rige and the desires of the latter

CHAPTER XVIII

CONCERNING SOME PRACTICES BY WHICH THE GOVERNMENT COM-PLETED THE REVOLUTIONARY EDUCATION OF THE PROPLE OF FRANCE

THE Government itself had long been at work to instil into and rivet upon the mind of the combion people many of the ideas which have been called revolutionary—ideas hostile to individual liberts, opposed to private rights, and favourable to violence

The King was the first to show with how much contempt it was possible to treat the most ancient, and apparently the best established, institutions Louis XV shook the monarchy and hastened the Revolution quite as much by his innovations as by his vices by his energy as by his indolence. When the people beheld the full and disappearance of a Parliament almost contemporary with the monarchy itself, and which had until then seemed as immovable as the throne, they vagnely perceived that they were drawing near a time of violence and of chance when everything may become possible, when nothing, however ancient, is respected and nothing however new may not be tried

During the whole course of his reign Louis XVI did nothing but talk of reforms to be accomplished There are few institutions of which he did not foreshadow the approaching ruin before the Revolution came to effect it After removing from the statute book some of the worst of these institutions he very soon replaced them, it seemed as if he wanted only to loosen their roots leaving to others the task of striking them down By some of the reforms which he effected himself ancient and venerable customs were sud denly changed without sufficient preparation and established rights were occasionally violated These reforms prepared the way for the Revolution not so much by overthrowing the obstacles in its wav, as by showing the people how to set about making it The evil was increased by the very purity and disinterestedness of the in tentions which actuated the king and his ministers, for no example is more dangerous than that of violence exerted for a good purpose by honest and well meaning men

At a much earlier period Lonis XIV. had publicly broached in his edicts the theory that all the land throughout the langdom land originally been granted conditionally by the State, which was thus declared to be the only true landowner, and that all others were posses-ors whose titles might be contested, and whose rights were miperfect. This doctrine had arisen out of the feudal system of legislation, but it was not proclaimed in Trance until feudalism was dying out, and was never adopted by the Courts of justice. It is, in fact, the germ of modern socialism, and it is curious enough to see it first springing up under royal despotism.

During the reigns which followed that of Louis XIV, the administration day by day instilled into the people in a manner still more practical and comprehensible the contempt in which private property was to be held. When during the latter half of the eighteenth century the taste for public works, especially for roads, began to prevail, the Government did not scruple to seize all the land needed for its undertakings, and to pull down the houses which stood in the way. The French Board of Works was already just as enamoured of the geometrical beauty of straight lines as it has been ever since, it carefully avoided following the existing roads if they were at all crooked, and rather than make the slightest deviation it cut through innumerable estates. The ground thus damaged or destroyed was never paid for but at an arbitruy rate and after long delay, or frequently not at all "When the Provincial Assembly of Lower Normandy took the

When the Provincial Assembly of Lower Normandy took the administration out of the hands of the Intendant, it was discovered that the price of all the land seized by authority in the preceding twenty years for making roads was still unpaid. The debt thus contracted by the State, and not discharged, in this small corner of France, amounted to 250,000 livres. The number of large proprietors thus injured was limited, but the small ones who suffeced were very numerous, for even then the land was much subdivided. Every one of these persons had learnt by his own experience how little respect the rights of an individual can claim when the interest of the public requires that they should be invaded—a doctrine which he was not likely to forget when the time came for applying it to others for his own advantage.

In a great number of parishes charatable endowments had formerly existed, destined by their founders to relieve the inhabitants in certain cases, and in conformity to testamentury bequest Most of these endowments were destroyed during the later days of the monarchy, or diverted from their original objects by mere Orders in Conneil, that is to say, by the arbitrary act of Government In most instances the funds thus left to particular villages were taken from them for the benefit of neighbouring hospitals At the same time the property of these hospitals was in its turn diverted to purposes which the founder had never had in view, and would undoubtedly not have approved An edict of 1780 authorised all these establishments to sell the lands which had been devised to them at various times to be held by them for ever, and permitted them to hand over the purchase-money to the State, which was to pay the interest upon it. This they said was making a better use of the charity of their forefathers than they had done themselves They forgot that the surest way of teaching mankind to violate the rights of the living is to pay no regard to the will of the dead The contempt displayed by the Administration of the old I tench monarchy for testamentary dispositions has never been surpassed by my succeeding power Nothing could be more unlike the scrupulous anxiety which leads the Inglish to invest every individual citizen with the force of the whole social body in order to assist him in maintaining the effect of his last dispositions and which induces them to pry even more respect to his memory than to hunself

¹ See Note LXXII Growth of Revolutionary Opinions under the Old Monarchy 2 See Note LXXIII

Compulsory requisitions the forced sale of provisions and the maximum are measures not without their precedents under the old maximum are measures not without their precedents under the old monarchy I have discovered instruces in which the officers of Government during periods of scarcity, fixed beforehand the pric of the provisions which the personnts brought to murket, and when the latter styed ways from fear of this constraint, ordinances were promulgated to compel them to come under penalty of a fine.

But nothing taught a more permicious lesson than some of the forms adopted by criminal justice when the common peopl were in question. The poor were even then far better protected than fas generally been supposed against the aggressions of any citizen richer or more po verful than themselves but when they had to do with the State they found only as I have already desorbed exceptional tribunds prejudiced judges a hasty and illusory procedure and a sentence executed summarily and without appeal

The Provest of the Constables and his heuterunt are to tule cognisance of the disturbances and gatherings which may be occasioned by the scarcity of corn the prosecution is to the place in due form and judgment to be passed by the Provest and with out appeal

His Majesty inhibits the jurisdiction of all courts of justice in these cases We learn by the Reports of the Constables, that on these occisions suspected villages were surrounded during the night, that houses were entered before day break, and persants who had been denounced were arrested without further warrant A mun thus arrested frequently remained for a long time in prison before he could speal to his judge although the ediets directed that every accused person should be examined within four and-twenty hours. This regulation was as precise and as little respected then/as it is now

By these means a mild and stable government daily taught the people the code of criminal procedure most appropriate to a period of revolution, and best adapted to arbitrary power. These lessons were constantly before their eyes, and to the very last the old monarchy gave the lower classes this dangerous education. Even Turgot himself in this respect faithfully limitated his predecessors When in 1775, his change in the corn laws occasioned resistance in the Parliament and disturbances in the rural districts he obtained a Royal ordonnance transferring the mutineers from the jurisdiction of the tribinals to that of the Provost-Marshal, 'which is chiefly destined, so the phrase runs, to repress popular tumults when it is desirable that examples should be quickly made.' Nay worse than this every persant leaving his parish without being provided with a certificate signed by the parish priest and by the Syndic, was to be prosecuted, arrested, and tried before the Provost Marshal as a vagabond

It is true that under this monarchy of the eighteenth century though the forms of procedure were terrific the punishment was almost always light. The object was to inspire fever rather thin to inflict pain, or rather, perhaps those in power were violent and arbitrary from habit or from indifference and mild by temperament. But this only increased the triste for this summary kind of justice. The lighter the penalty the more readily was the manner forgotten in which it had been pronounced. The indiances of the sentence is even to to will the horror of the mode of procedure.

I may venture to affirm from the first I have in my possession that agreat number of the proceedings adopted by the Revolutionary Government had precedents and evamples in the measures taken with regard to the common people during the last two centuries of the monarchy. The monarchy gave to the Revolution many of its forms the latter only added to them the atrecty of its own spirit

CHAPTER XIX

SHOWING THAT A GREAT ADMINISTRATIVE REVOLUTION HAD PRECEDED THE POLITICAL REVOLUTION, AND WHAT WERE THE CONSEQUENCES IT PRODUCED

NOTHING had yet been changed in the form of the French Government, but already the greater part of the secondary laws which rigulated the condition of prisons and the administration of affairs had been abolished or modified

The destruction of the Guilds, followed by their partial and incomplete restoration, had totally changed all the old relations between workmen and their employers. These relations had become not only different, but uncertain and difficult. The police of the masters was at an end, the authority of the State over the trades was imperfectly est-blished, and the artison, placed in a constrained and undecided position between the Government and his employer, did not know to whom he was to look for protection, or from whom he was to submit to restraint. This state of discontent and anarchy, into which the whole lower class of the towns had been plunged at one blow, produced very great consequences as soon as the people began to reappear on the pointeal stage.

One year before the Revolution a Royal edict had disturbed the order of the administration of justice in all its parts, several new jurisdictions had been created a multitude of others abolished, and all the rules of judicial competence changed. Now in France, as I lave already shown the number of persons engaged in administer ing justice and in executing the sentences of the law was enormous in fact it may be said that the whole of the middle class was more or less connected with the tribunals. The effect of this law, therefore was to unsettle the station and property of thousands of families and to place them in a new and precarious position. The edict was little less inconvenient to litigants, who found it difficult, in the midst of this judicial revolution, to discover what laws were applicable to their cases and by what tribunals they were to be decaded.

of all power, though his office was not suppressed. After taking from him the absolute right of doing everything, he was charged with the task of assisting and superintending all that was to be done by the Assembly; as if it were possible for a degraded public officer to enter into the spirit of the law by which he has been dispossessed and to assist its operation.

That which had been done to the Intendant was now extended to his Sub-delegate. By his side, and in the place which he had formerly occupied, was placed a District Assembly, which was to act under the direction of the Provincial Assembly, and upon analogous principles.

All that we know of the acts of the Provincial Assemblies of 1787,1 and even their own reports, show that as soon as they were created they engaged in covert hostilities and often in open war with the Intendants, who made use of their superior experience only to embarrass the movements of their successors. Here an Assembly complained that it was only with difficulty that it could extract the most necessary documents from the hands of the Intendant. There an Intendant accused the members of the Assembly of endeavouring to usurp functions, which, as he said, the edicts had still left to himself. He appealed to the Minister, who often returned no answer, or merely expressed doubts, for the subject was as new and as obscure to him as to every one else. Sometimes the Assembly resolved that the Intendant had administered badly, that the roads which he had caused to be made were ill planned or ill kept up, and that the corporate bodies under his trust have gone to ruin. Frequently these assemblies hesitated in the ob-curry of laws so imperfectly known; they sent great distances to consult one another, and constantly sent each other advice. The Intendant of Auch asserted that he had the right to oppose the will of the Provincial Assembly which had authorised a parish to tax itself, the Assembly maintained that this was a subject on which the Intendant could not longer give orders, but only advice, and it asks the Assembly of the Ile de France for its opinion

Amid-t all these recriminations and consultations the course of administration was impeded and often altogether stopped; the vital functions of the country seemed almost suspended 'The stagnation of affairs is complete,' says the Provincial Assembly of Lorraine, which in this was only the echo of several others, 'and all good citizens are grieved at it.'

On other occasions these new governing bodies erred on the side of over-activity and excessive self confidence, they were filled with a restless and uneasy zeal, which led them to seek to change all the old methods suddenly, and hastily to reform all the most ancient abuses. Under the pretext that henceforth they were to be the guardians of the towns, they assumed the control of municipal affairs, in a word, they put the finishing stroke to the general confusion by aiming at universal improvement

* See Note LXXV., Con'es's in the Provincial A. emblies of 1787.

Now, when we consider what an immense space the administrative powers of the State had so long filled in France, the numerous interests which were daily affected by them, and all that depended upon them or stood in need of their co operation, when we reflect that it was to the Government rather than to themselves that private persons looked for the success of their own affairs, for the encouragement of their manufactures, to ensure their means of subsistence, to lay out and keep up their roads, to maintain their tranquility, and to preserve their wealth, we shall have some idea of the infinite number of people who were personally injured by the evils from which the administration of the kingdom was suffering

But it was in the villages that the defects of the new organication were most strongly felt, in them it not only disturbed the course of authority, it likewise suddenly changed the relative position of society, and brought every class into collision

When in 1775, Turgot proposed to the King to reform the administration of the rural districts the greatest difficulty be encountered, as he himself informs us, arose from the unequal nucleance of trivation for how was it possible to make men who were not all liable to contribute in the same manner, and, some of whom were altogether exempt from taxation, act and dilherate together on parochial affairs relating chiefly to the assessment and the collection of those very trices and the purposes to which they were to be applied? Every parish contained nobles and the decay who did not pay the taille peasants who were partially or wholly exempt and others who paid it all. It was as three distinct further each of which would have demanded a separate administration. The difficulty was involuble

Nowhere indeed, was insoluble

Nowhere indeed, was the inequality of fixation more apparent than in the rural districts, nowhere was the population more effectually divided into different groups frequently hostile to one another. In order to make it possible to give to the villages a collective administration and a free government on a small scale it would have been necessary to begin by subjecting all the inhal itants to an equal taxation and lessening the distance by which the classes were divided.

econdition of the Syndic raised with that of the community to which he belonged as its chief agent '1 I ven this question was not easily answered. I have found the letter of a village build, written in 1788, in which he express a his indignation at having ben elected to the office of Syndic, 'which was,' he said, 'contrary to all the privileges of his other post.' To this the Compressly to all the privileges of his other post.' To this the Compressly to all the privileges of his other post.' To this the Compressly to all the privileges of his other post.' To this the Compressly to all the must be made to understand that he ought to be proud of the choice of his fellow citizens, and that mercour the new Syndies were not to resemble the local officers who had formerly borne the same appellation, and that they would be treated with more consideration by the footerment.

On the other hand some of the chief inhabitants of parishes, and even men of rail, lagan at once to draw nearer to the persantry as soon as the pravantry had become a power in the State. A landed proprietor excressing a heritable jurisdiction over a village near Puris complained that the King's Edict debarred him from taking part even as a mere inhabitant, in the proceedings of the Parochial Assemil 1. Others consented from mere pul he spurit, as they said, to accept even the office of Syndie

It was too late but as the members of the higher classes of society in France thus began to approach the rural population and sought to combine with the people, the people drew brck into the isolation to which it had been condemned and maintained that position. Some princhial assemblies refused to allow the Seigneur of the place to take his serit among them, others practiced every kind of trick to evade the reception of persons as low-born as themselves but who were ruch. 'We are informed, sud the Provincial Assembly of Lower Normandy, 'that several municipal bodies have refused to receive among their members landowners not, being noble and not domicaled in the prirish though these persons have an undoubted right to six in such meetings. Some other bodies have even refused to admit farmers not having any propecty in land in the prirish.

Thus then the whole reform of these secondary enactments was already novel obscure and conflicting before the principal laws affecting the government of the State had yet been touched at all. But all that was still untouched was already shaken and it could barely be said that any law was in existence which had not already been threatened with abolition or a speedy change by the Central Government itself.

This sudden and comprehensive renovation of all the laws and all the administrative habits of France, which preceded the political Revolution of 1789, is a thing scarcely thought of at the present time, yet it was one of the severest perturbations which ever occurred in the history of a great people This first revolution exercised a prodigious influence on the Revolution which was about to succeed it, and caused the latter to be an event different from all the events of the same kind which had ever till then happened in the world and from those which have happened cines 1

CHAP XIX

The first English Revolution, which overthrew the whole political constitution of the country and abolished the monarchy itself, touched but superficially the secondary laws of the land and changed scarcely any of the customs and usages of the nation.

The administration of justice and the conduct of public business. retained their old forms and followed even their past aberrations In the heat of the Civil Wars the twelve judges of England are though shaken at its apex, remained firm upon its base said to have continued to go the circuit twice a year Everything was not, therefore, abandoned to agitation at the same time. The Revolution was circumscribed in its effects, and English society. France herself has since 1789 witnessed several revolutions which have fundamentally changed the whole structure of her government Most of them have been very sudden and brought about by force, in open violation of the existing laws let the disorder they have caused has never been either long or general . scarcely have they been felt by the bulk of the nation sometimes they have been unperceived

171

ever beheld

Imperor And when lortune had again given the same turn to her which they began once more to judge and to administer for the King, for the Republic, and for the I mperor, the same persons doing the same thing for what is there in the name of a master?

Their business was not so much to be good citizens as to be good administrators and good judicial officers. As soon as the first shock was over, it seemed, therefore, as if nothing had stirred in the country

But when the Revolution of 1789 brol e out, that part of the Government which though subordinate, makes itself daily felt by every member of the commonwealth, and which affects his wellbeing more constantly and decisively than anything else, had just been totally subserted the administrative offices of France had just changed all their agents and revised all their principles The State had not at first appeared to receive a violent shock from this immense reform, but there was not a man in the country who had not felt it in his own particular sphere | Tvery one had been shaken in his condition, disturbed in his habits, or put to inconvenience in his calling A certain order still prevailed in the more important and general affairs of the nation, but already no one knew whom to obey, whom to apply to, nor how to proceed in those lesser and private affairs which form the staple of social life The nation having lost its balance in all these details one more blow sufficed to upset it altogether, and to produce the widest catastrophe and the most frightful confusion that the world had

176

affurs into its own hands the least as well as the greatest shown, on the other hand, how, by a necessary consequence, Paris had made itself the master of the kingdom of which till then it had been the capital, or rather had itself become the entire country These two facts, which were peculiar to France, would alone suffice if necessary, to explain why a riot could fundamentally destroy a monarchy which had for ages endured so many violent convulsions and which, on the eve of its dissolution, still seemed unassailable even to those who were about to overthrow it

France being one of the states of Europe in which all political life had been for the longest time and most effectually extinguished, in which private persons had most lost the usage of business, the habit of reading the course of events, the experience of popular movements and almost the notion of the people, it may readily be imagined how all Frenchmen came at once to fall into a frightful Revolution without foreseeing it, those who were most threatened by that catastrophe leading the way, and undertaking to open and widen the path which led to it

As there were no longer any free institutions, or consequently any political classes, no living political bodies, no organised or disciplined parties, and as, in the absence of all these regular forces the direction of public opinion, when public opinion came again into being devolved exclusively on the French philosophers it might be expected that the Revolution would be directed less with a view to a particular state of facts than with reference to abstract principles and very general theories at might be anticipated that instead of endeavouring separately to amend the laws which were bad, all laws would be attacked, and that an attempt would le made to substitute for the ancient constitution of I rance an entirely novel system of government conceived by these writers

The Church being naturally connected with all the old institu tions which were doomed to perish it could not be doubted that the Revolution would shake the religion of the country when it overthrew the civil government wherefore it was impossible to feretell to what pitch of extravagance these innovators might rush, delivered at once from all the restraints which religion custom and law impose on the imagination of mankind

He who should thus have studied the state of France would easily have foreseen that no stretch of audacity was too extreme to le attempted there, and no act of violence too great to be endur d 'What said Burke in one of his eloquent 1 amphlets, 'is there not a man who can answer for the smallest district-nay, more not on man who can answer for another? Every one is airested in his own home without resistance, whether he be accused of royalism, of moderantism, or of anything else. But Mr. Burke knew but little of the condition in which that monarchy which he regretted had abandoned France to her new masters. The administration which had preceded the Revolution had deprived the French both of the means and of the desire of mutual assistance. When the Revolution arrived, it would have been vain to seek in the greater part of France for any ten men accustomed to act systematically and in concert, or to provide for their own defence; the Central Power had alone assumed that duty, so that when this Central Power had passed from the hands of the Crown into those of an irresponsible and sovereign Assembly, and had become as terrible as it had before been good-natured, nothing stood before it to stop or even to check it for a moment. The same cause which led the monarchy to fall so easily rendered everything possible after its fall had occurred.

Never had toleration in religion, never had mildness in authority, never had humanity and goodwill to mankind been more professed, and, it seemed, more generally admitted than in the eighteenth century. Even the rights of war, which is the last refuge of violence, had become circumscribed and softened. Yet from this relaxed state of manners a Revolution of mexampled inhumanity was about to spring, though this softening of the manners of France was not a mere pretence, for no sooner had the Revolution spent its fury than the same gentleness immediately pervaded all the laws of the country, and penetrated into the habits of political society.

This contrast between the benignity of its theories and the violence of its actions, which was one of the strangest characteristics of the French Revolution, will surprise no one who has remarked that this Revolution had been prepared by the wost civilised classes of the nation, and that it was accomplished by the most barbarous and the most rude. The members of those civilised classes having no pre-existing bond of union, no habit of acting in concert, no hold upon the people, the people almost unstantly became supreme when the old authorities of the State were annihilated. Where the people did not actually assume the government it gave its spirit to those who governed; and if, on the other hand, it be recollected what the manner of life of that people had been under the old monarchy, it may readily be surmised what it would soon become.

Even the peculiarities of its condition had imparted to the French people several virtues of no common occurrence. Emanci-

SUPPLEMENTARY CHAPTER

ON THE PAYS D'EFATS, AND ESPECIALLY ON THE CONSTITUTIONS OF LANGUEDOG

It is not my intention minutely to investigate in this place how public business was carried on in each of the provinces called Pays d Etats, which were still in existence at the outbreak of the Revolution I wish only to indicate the number of them, to point out those in which local life was still most active, to show what were the relations of these provinces with the administration of the Crown , how far they formed an exception to the general rules I have previously established, how far they fell within those rules; and lastly, to show by the example of one of these provinces what they might all have easily become

Estates had existed in most of the provinces of France-that is each of them had been administered under the King's government by the gens des trois elats, as they were then called, which meant the representatives of the Clergy, the Nobility, and the This provincial constitution, like most of the other Commons political institutions of the Middle Ages, occurred, with the same features, in almost all the civilised parts of Europe—in all those parts, at least, into which Germanic manners and ideas had pene-In many of the provinces of Germany these States subsisted down to the French Revolution, in those provinces in which they had been previously destroyed they had only disappeared in the course of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Everywhere, for two hundred years, the sovereigns had carried on a clandistine or an open warfare against them Nowhere had they attempted to improve this institution with the progress of time, but only to destroy and deform it whenever an opportunity presented itself and when they could not do worse

In I rance, in 1789, these States only existed in five province $ of a certain extent and in some insignificant districts Provincial liberty could in truth, only be said to exist in two provinces-in Brittans and in Languedoc eversuh re else the institution had entirely lost its virility, and was reduced to a mere shadow

there as well as everywher else, it or ated numerous new public officers, whose places the province was compelled to buy up at a large price

I anguedoc was governed life the other provinces of I rane by an Inten lant | Plus Intend int had in each district, his Sub-del gates who corresponded with the I ends of the parishes and directed them The Intendant exercised the tutelage of the administration as com pletely as in the 1 1/8 d'election The humblest village in the gorges of the Cevennes was precluded from making the smallest outly until it had been authorised by an Order of the Kings Council from Paris That part of the judicial administration which is now denominated in France the contentioux ad un stratif, or the litigated questions referred to the Council of State was not only not less but more comprehensive than in the remainder of France The Intendant decid d in the first instance, all questions relating to the public ways, he judged all suits relating to roads, and in general, he prone meed on all the matters in which the Government was or conceived itself to be, interested The Government extended the same protection as elsewhere to all its agents against the rash prosecutions of the citizens whom they might have oppressed

What then did Languedoc possess which distinguished it from the other provinces of the kingdom and which caused them to envy its institutions? Three things sufficed to render it entirely different from the rest of France

I An Assembly composed of men of station looked up to by the population, respected by the Grown to which no officer of the Central Power or to use the phraseology then in use 'no officer of the King could belong and in which every year the special interests of the province were freely and gravely discussed. The mere fact that the royal administration was placed near this source of light caused its privileges to be very differently exercised and though its agents and its instincts were the same its results in no degree resembled what they were elsewhere

II In Languedoc many public works were executed at the expense of the king and his agents. There were other public works for which it e Central Government provided the funds and partly directed the execution but it is greater part of their were executed at the expense of the province alone. When the king I ad approved the plan and authorised the estimates for these last u ent oned works they were executed by officers chosen by it Estates and under the inspection of commissioners taken from

HI Lastly the province had the right of levving itself and in the manner it preferred a part of the royal taxes and all the rates which were imposed by its own authority for its own wants

Let us see the results which Languedoc continued to extract from these privileges—they deserve a minute attention

Nothing is more striking in the other parts of Trance—the pays d'election—than the almost complete absence of local charges. The general imposts were frequently oppressive, but a province spent nothing on itself. In Languedoc, on the contrary, the annual expenditure of the province on public works was enormous, in 1780 it exceeded two millions of livres.

The Central Government was sometimes alarmed at witnessing so vat an outlaw. It ferred that the province exhausted by such an effort would be unable to acquit the share of the taxes due to the State, it blamed the Estates for not moderating this expenditure. I have read a document, framed by the Assembly in answer to these animadversions the passages I am about to transcribe from it will depict better than all I could say, the spirit which animated this small Government.

It is admitted in this statement that the province has commenced and is still carrying on immense public works but far from offering any spology for this proceeding it is added that saving the opposition of the Crown these works will be still further extended and persevered in The province had already improved or rectified the channel of the principal rivers within its territory and it was then engaged in adding to the Canal of Burgundy dug under Louis XIV, but already insufficient a prolongation which passing through Lower Languedoc should proceed by Cette and Agen to the Rhone The port of Cette had been opened to tride and was maintained at great cot. All these expenses had as was observed a national rather than a provincial characters, vet the province as the party chi fly interested had taken them on itself. It was also engaged in draining and restoring to agriculture the marshes of Argues-Mortes Roads had been the object of its peculiar care all those which connect the province with the rest of the Lingdom had been opened or put in good order even the cross-roads between the towns and villages of Languedoc had been repured All these diff rent roads were excellent even in winter and formed the greate t contrast with the hard meyen and ill constructed roals which were to be found in most of the adjacent provinces such as Diuphiny Quercy and the government of Berd nux—all pop f l ct on it was remarked On this point th R port a peals to the opinion of trivellers and traders and this again these several divisions were all to assist the townships, even for the completion of undertakings of local interest, if they were necessary and above its strength, for, said the States frequently, 'the fundamental principle of our constitution is that all parts of Languedoc are reciprocally bound together, and ought successively to help each other.'

The works executed by the province were to be carefully prepared beforehand, and first submitted to the examination of the lesser bodies which were to contribute to them. They were all paid for: forced labour was unknown. I have observed that in the other parts of France—the pays d'élection—the land taken from its owners for public works was always ill and tardily paid for, and often not paid for at all. This was one of the great grievances complained of by the Provincial Assemblies when they were convoked in 1787. In some cases the possibility of liquidating debts of this nature had been taken away, for the object taken had been altered or destroyed before the valuation. In Languedoc every inch of ground taken from its owner was to be carefully valued before the works were begun, and paid for in the first year of the execution.

The regulations of these Estates relating to different public works, from which these details are copied, seemed so well conceived that even the Central Government admired, though without imitating them. The King's Council, after having sanctioned the application of them, caused them to be printed at the Royal press, and to be transmitted to all the Intendants of France as a document to be consulted.

What I have said of public works is a fortiori applicable to that other not less important portion of the provincial administration which related to the levy of taxes. In this respect, more paticularly, the contrast was so great between the kingdom and the rovinces that it is difficult to believe they formed part of the same empire.

I have had occasion to say elsewhere that the methods of proceding used in Languedoc for the assessment and collection of the taille were in part the same as are now employed in France in the levy of the public taxes. Nor shall I here revert to this subject, merely adding that the province was so attached to its own superior methods of proceeding, that when new taxes were imposed by the Crown, the States of Languedoc never hesitated to purchase at a very high price the right of levying them in their own manner and by their own agents exclusively.

In spite of all the expenses which I have successively enumerated, the finances of Languedoc were nevertheless in such good order, and its credit so well established, that the Central Government often had recourse to it, and borrowed, in the name of the province, sums of money which would not have been lent on such favourable terms to the Government itself. Thus Languedoc borrowed, on its own security, but for the King's service, in the later years of the monarchy, 73,200,000 livres, or nearly three millions sterling.

The Government and the Ministers of the Crown looked, however, with an unfavourable eye on these provincial liberties. Richelben had first mutilated and afterwards abolished them The spiritless and indolent Louis XIII., who loved nothing, detested them, the horror he felt for all provincial privileges was such, said Boulanvilliers, that his anger was excited by the mere name of them. It is hard to sound the hatred of feeble souls for whatever compels them to exert themselves. All that they retain of manhood is turned in that direction, and they exhibit strength in their animosity, however weak they may be in everything else Iortunately the ancient constitution of Languedoo was restored under the minority of Louis XIV, who consequently respected it as his own work. Louis XV suspended it for a couple of years, but afterwards allowed it to go on

The creation of municipal offices for sale exposed the constitution of the province to dangers less direct, but not less formidable That permicious institution not only destroyed the constitution of the towns, it tended to vitiate that of the provinces. I know not whether the deputies of the commons in the Provincial Assemblies had ever been elected ad hue, but at any rate they had long ceased to be so; the municipal officers of the towns were ex-officio the bode representatives of the burgesses and the people in those bodies importance, and then spirit gradually infused itself into the whole body Nay, more, the three magistrates, who under the name of Syndics General, were charged in the name of the States, with the ordinary management of the business, were almost always lawyers,—that is to say, commoners. The nobility was strong enough to maintain its rank, but no longer strong enough to The clergy though consisting to a great extent of men of gentle birth, lived on excellent terms with the commons, they engerly adopted most of the plans of that Order and laboured in conjunction with it to increase the material prosperity of the whole community, by encouraging trade and manufictures thus placing their own great knowledge of mankind and their singular dexterity in the conduct of affairs at the service of the people A priest was almost always chosen to proceed to Versailles to discuss with the Ministers of the Crown the questions which sometimes set at variance the royal authority and that of the States It might be said that throughout the last century Languedoc was administered by the Commons, who were controlled by the Nobles and assisted by the Bishops

Thanks to this peculiar constitution of Languedoc the spirit of the age was enabled peacefully to pervade this ancient institution, and to modify it altogether without at all destroying it

It might have been so everywhere else in France A small portion of the perseverance and the evertions which the sovereigns of France employed for the abolition or the dislocution of the Provincial Estates would have sufficed to perfect them in this manner and to adapt them to all the wants of modern civilisation, if those sovereigns had ever had any other aim than to become and to remain the masters of France

The chapters which follow were not included in the work first published by M de Tocqueville in 18.55. They are the continuation of it left un finished at the time of his death in 18.95 and published in 1865 by M de Beaumont amongst the posthimnous works of his firend. They are now translated for the first time. Although they must be regarded as incomplete since they never received the final revision of the author and the latter portions of them are fragmentry vet they are not I thinh unworthy to form part of the work to which they were intended to belone and a melan choly interest attaches to them as the last meditations of a great and original thinker. In the French text an attempt has been made to distinguish by a different type the passages which are more carefully finished from those which couns ted merely of notes for further elaboration. But as this arrange ment breaks the uniformity of the text more than is necessary I have not

adoptel at -H R1

BOOK III.

CHAPTER I

OF THE VIOLENT AND UNDEFINED AGITATION OF THE HUMAN NUND AT THE MOMENT WHEN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION BROKE OUT

What I have previously said of Trunce is applicable to the whole Continent. In the ten or fifteen years preceding the French Recolution, the human mind was abandoned, throughout Europe, to strange, incoherent, and irregular impulses, symptoms of a new and extraordinary disease, which would have singularly alarmed the world if the world had understood them

A conception of the greatness of man in general and of the omnipotence of his reason and the boundless range of his intelligence, had penetrated and perraded the spirit of the age, yet this lofty conception of mankind in general was commingled with a boundless contempt for the age in which men were living and the society to which they belonged Never was so much limitly united to so much pride—the pride of humanity was inflated to madiess, the estimate each man formed of his age and country was singularly low memoirs-all the correspondence of the time which has been published-attest a state of mind so different from the present, that nothing short of this concurrence of certain and abundant evidence could convince us of the fact

Every page of Schlosser's 'History of the Eighteenth Century' reveals this general presentiment, that a great change was about to take place in the condition of mankind order of things might be everthiown to establish a new order in the midst of disorder and luin, would have appeared to them an absurd illusion and a fantastic dream. The gradual improvement of secrety seemed to them the limit of the possible

It is a common error of the people who are called wise and practical in ordinary times, to judge by certain rules the men whose very object is to change or to destroy those rules. When a time is come at which passion takes the guidance of affurs the beliefs of men of experience are less worthy of consideration than the schemes which engage the imagination of dreamers.

It is currous to see in the official correspondence of that epoch civil officers of bultty and foresight laying their plans fruming their measures, and calculating scientifically the use they will make of their powers, at a time when the Government they are serving, the laws they are applying, the society they are living in, and they themselves shall be no more

'What scenes are passing in France!' writes Johann Muller on the 6th of August, 1789' 'Blessed be the impression they produce on the nations and on their masters! I know there are excesses, but the cost of a free constitution is not too great. Is not a storm which purifies the air better than an atmosphere tunted as with the plague, even though here and there it should strike a few heads?' 'What an event, exclaimed I'ox, 'how much the greatest it is that ever happened in the world!' and how much the best!'

Can we be surprised that this conception of the Revolution as a general uprising of humanity, a conception which enlyged and invigored so many small and feeble souls, should have taken possession at once of the mind of France, when even other countries pirtool of it? Nor is it automishing that the first excesses of the Revolution should have affected the best patriots of France so little when even foreigners who were not excited by the struggle or embittered by personal grievances could extend so much indefence to them

Let it not be supposed that this sort of abhorence of them solves and of their \(\gamma_p^\circ\) which had thus strangely fillen upon almost all the inhabitants of the continent of Europe, was a superficial or a transient sentiment

len years later when the Trench Revolution had inflicted on Germany all sorts of violent transformations accompanied by d ath

[|] Letter of Johan M. Her t. 1 | ron | 1789 (Memorials at 1 C | re per lenc | els 1 s, August (tl. 1789 | ef Fox hi 361) | ef Fox hi 361)

CHAP I

and destruction, even then, one of those Germans, in whom enthusiasm for France had turned to bitter hatred, exclaims, mindful of the past, in a confidential effusion, 'What was is no more What new edifice will be raised on the ruins, I know not But this I know, that it would be the direct calamity if this tremendous era were again to give birth to the apathy and the worn-out forms of the past' 'Yes,' replied the person to whom these words were addressed, 'the old social body must perish'! The years which preceded the French Revolution were, in almost every part of Europe, years of great national prospenty The useful arts were everywhere more cultivated The taste for enjoyments, which follow in the train of affluence, was more diffused Industry and commerce, which supply these wants, were improving and spreading. It seemed as if the life of man becoming thus more busy and more sensual, the human mind would lose sight of those abstract studies which embrace society, and would centre more and more on the petty cares of daily life But the contrary took place Throughout Europe, almost as much as in France, all the educated classes were plunged in philosophical discussions and dogmatical theories Even in places ordinarily the most remote from speculations of this nature, the same train of argument was eagerly pursued In the most trading cities of Germany, in Hamburg, Lubeck, and Duntzig the merchants, traders, and manufacturers would meet after the labours of the day to discuss amongst themselves the great questions which affect the existence, the condition, the happiness of man Even the women, amidst their petty household cares, were sometimes distracted by these enigmas of life 'We thought,' says Perthes, 'that by becoming highly enlightened, one might become perfect emotion. Treasures of passion seemed accumulated in every breast, which sought but an occasion to break forth.

Thus, a traveller who had been round the globe was an object of general attention. When Forster went to Germany in 1771, he was received with enthusiasm. Not a town but gave him an ovation. Crowds flocked about him to hear his adventures from his own lips, but still more to hear him describe the unknown countries he had visited, and the strange customs of the men among whom he had been living Was not their savage simplicity worthy more than all our riches and our arts: were not their instincts above our virtues?

A certain unfrocked Lutheran priest, one Basidow, ignorant, quarrelsome, and a drunkard, a caricature of Luther, excegitated a new system of schools which was, he said, to change the ideas and manners of his countrymen. He put forth his scheme in coarse and intemperate language. The object, as he took care to announce, was not only to regenerate Germany; but the lumnar race. Forthwith, all Germany is in movement. Princes, nobles, commons, towns, cities, abet the great innovator. Lords and ladies of high estate write to Basidow to ask his advice. Mothers of families place his books in the hands of their children The old schools founded by Melanchthon are forsaken. A college, designed to educate these reformers of manhind, is founded under the name of the 'Philanthropian,' blazes for a moment, and disappears. The enthussam drops, levung behind it confusion and doubt.

The real spirit of the age was to reject every form of mysticism, and to cling in all things to the evidence most palpide to the understanding. Nevertheless, in this volent perturbation of mind, men, not knowing as yet which way to look, cast themselves suddenly on the supernatural. On the eve of the French Revolutions, Europe was covered with strange fraternities and secret societies, which only revived under new names delusions that had long been forgotten. Such were the doctrines of Swedenborg, of the Martinists, of the Freemasons, the Illiminiant, the Rosicrucians, the disciples of Strict Abstinence, the Mesmerists, and many other varieties of similar sectls. Many of these sects originally contemplated no more than the private advantage of their members

1 Not a man of education, of what ever rank, would pass through the town where Forster lived without coming to converse with him Trances many him, nobles courted him, the common alty throughed about him the learned were intensely interested by his conversat on To Michrelis, Heyne, Her der, and others who were endeavouring to solve the mystery of the antiquity and history of mankind, Forster security of the contract of the solution of the contract of the contract of another hemisphere which had not come in contact with any form of civilisation.

CHAP I must be considered as one of the most conspicuous signs of its approach They were not the only signs

It would be a mistake to suppose that the American Revolution was hailed with ardent sympathy in France alone the noise of it went forth to the ends of Europe everywhere it was regarded as a beacon Steffens, who fifty years later took so active a part in rousing Germany against France, relates in his Memoirs, that in early childhood the first thing that excited him was the cause of American independence

'I still remember vividly,' says he, 'what happened at Elsinore and in the roadstead, on the day when that peace was signed which secured the triumph of freedom The day was fine, the roadstead was full of people of all nations We awaited with eager impatience the very dawn All the ships were dressed-the masts ornamented with pennons, everything covered with flags, the weather was calm, with just wind enough to cause the gay bunting to flutter in the breeze, the boom of cannon, the cheers of the crews on deck, completed the festal character of the day My father had invited some friends to his table, they drank to the victory of the Americans and the triumph of the popular cause, whilst a dim presentiment that great events would result from this tramph mingled with their rejoicings It was the bright and cheering dawn of a bloody day My fither sought to imbie us with the love of political freedom Contrary to the habit of the house, he had us brought to table, where he impressed on us the importance of the event we were witnessing, and bade us drink with him and his guests to the welfare of the new commonwealth 1

Of the men who, in every corner of old Europe, felt themselves thus moved by the deeds of a small community in the New World not one thoroughly understood the deep and secret cause of his own emotion yet all heard a signal in that distant sound What it announced was still unknown. It was the voice of John crying in the wilderness that new times were at hand

Seek not to assign to these facts which I have been relating any peculiar cause all of them were different symptoms of the same social disease On all hands the old institutions and the old powers no longer fitted accurately the new condition and the new wants of man Hence that strange unrest which led even the great and the worldly to regard their own state of life as intolerable Hence that universal thirst for change, which came unbidden

Memoirs of Henry Steffens Breslau 1840 Steffens was born in 1775 at Stavaguer in Norway

CHAPTER II

HOW THIS VAGUE PERTURBATION OF THE HUMAN MIND SUDDENLY BECAME IN FRANCE A POSITIVE PASSION, AND WHAT FORM THIS PASSION AT FIRST ASSUMED

In the year 1787 this vague perturbation of the human mind, which I have just described, and which had for some time past been agricting the whole of Europe without any precise direction, suddenly became in France an active passion directed to a positive object. But, strange to say, this object was not that which the French Revolution was to attrin and the men who were first and most keenly affected by this new passion were precisely those whom the Revolution was to devour

At first, indeed, it was not so much the equality of rights as political freedom which was looked for, and the Frenchmen who were first most of themselves, and who setsociety in motion belonged not to the lower but to the highest order. Before it sunk down to the people, this new born detestation of absolute and arbitrary power burst forth amongst the nobles, the dergy, the mystracy, the most privileged of the middle classes,—those in short who, coming nearest in the State to the master had more than others the means of resisting him middle hope of sharing his power

But why was the hatred of despotism the first symptom. Was it not because in this state of general distaffaction, the common ground on which it was most easy to agree was that of war against a political power, which either oppressed every one alike or supported that by which every one was oppressed, and because the noble and the rich found in liberty the only mode of expresing this distaffaction which they felt more than any other class?

I shall not relate how Louis AVI was led by financial considerations to convoke about him, in an as embly the members of the nobility, the clury and the upper rank of the commons and to sul mit to this body of Notables the state of affairs. I am discussing history, not nurriting it. It is well known that this searchly, which met at Versailles on the 22nd I chroar 1787, consisted of nin pers of Franc, twinty nobl men, eight privy people It would have abolished forced labour, reformed the taille, and suppressed the twentieths, a species of fax from which the apper classes had continued to make themselves exempt. In place of these taxes, which were to be abolished or reformed, a land-tax was to be imposed, on the very same justs which has since become the basis of the land-tax of Trance, and the custom-houses, which placed grievous restrictions on trade and industry, were to be removed to the frontier of the kingdom. Beside, and almost in the place of, the Intendants who administered each province, an elec-

HAP II OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED RETORMS 203

the body was to be constituted, with the power not only of witching the conduct of public business, but, in most cases, of directing it All these measures were conformable to the spurit of the times. They were resisted or postponed by the Notables. Nevertheless, the Government remained unpopular, and the Notables had the public cry in their favour

Government, they were loudly cheered on to the attack. The King hastening to dismiss them, thought himself obliged to offer them his public than! s

Not a few of these persons are said to have been amazed at this degree of public favour and sudden power. They would have been fir more astomshed at it if they could have foreseen what was about to follow if they had known that these same laws, which they had resisted with so much popular applause, were founded on the very principles which were to triumph in the Revolution, that the traditional institutions which they opposed to the innovations of the Government were precisely the institutions which the Revolution was about to destroy

That which caused the popularity of these Notables was not the form of their opposition, but the opposition itself They criticised the abuses of the Government, they condemned its produgality, they demanded an account of its expenditure, they spoke of the constitutional laws of the country, of the fundamental principles which limit the unlimited power of the Crown, and, without precisely demanding the interposition of the nation in the Lovernment by the States General, they perpetually suggested that idea This was enough

The Government had already long been suffering from a malady which is the endemic and incurable disease of powers that have undertaken to order, to foresee, to do everything It had assumed a universal responsibility. However men might differ in the grounds of their complaints they agreed in blaming the common source of them, what had hitherto been no more than a general inclination of mind then became a universal and impetuous pas sion. All the secret sores caused by duly contact with dilapidated institutions, which chafed both manners and opinion in a thousand places - all the smothered animosities kept alive by divided classes, by contested positions by absurd or oppressive distinctions rose against the supreme power Long had they sought a pathway to the light of day that path once opened they rushed blindly along It was not their natural path, but it was the first they found open Hatred of arbitrary power became then their sole passion, and the Government their common enemy and strictly followed The old machine of Royal government was again set in motion but it become apparent that the machine was propelled by some new motive power of an unknown kind, which, instead of causing it to move onwards, was about to break it in meeces

BOOK TIE

The King then, according to custom, caused the new edicts to be brought down to the Parliament and the Parliament, equally according to custom, laid its humble remonstrance at the steps of the throne ¹

The King replied, and Parliaments insisted. For centuries things had gone on thus, and the nation heard from time to time this soit of political dialogue carried on above its head between the sovereign and his magnitrates. The practice had only been interrupted during the reign of Louis XIV and for a time. But the novelty lay in the subject of the debate and the nature of the arguments.

novelty by in the subject of the debate and the nature of the riguments.

This time the Pirliment, before it proceeded to register the edicts called for all the accounts of the finance department, which we should now cull the budget of the State, in support of the measures, and as the King inturally declined to hand over the entire government to a body which was irresponsible and non elected, and so to share the legislative power with a Conrt of Justice the Purliament then declared that the nation alone had the right to ruso fresh taxes, and thereupon deminded that the nation should be convoked. The Purliament grasped the very heart of the people, but held it only for a moment.

CHAP III. INILE AND PROTEST OF THE PARLIAMENT 207

The arguments put forward by the Magistracy in support of their demands were not le s novel than the demands themselves The King they said, was only the administrator and not the owner of the public fortune the representative and chief officer of the nation, not its master. Sovereignty resided in the nation itself. The nation alone could decide great questions, its rights were not dependent on the will of the sovereign, they took their being from the nature of man, they were as inalienable and indestructible as human nature itself 'The institution of the States-General,' they declared, 'is a principle founded on the rights of m in and confirmed by reason'1 'Common interest has combined men in society, and given rise to governments, that alone can maintain them'2 'No pre-cription of the States-General cun run against the nature of things or against the imperishable rights of the nation 'a 'Public opinion is rarely mistaken it is rare that men receive impressions contrary to truth '4 The King having exiled the Parliament from Paris, that body protested that liberty of speech and action was an inalienable right of man, and could not be wrested from him without tyranny, say, by the regular forms of judicial procedure less did it demand, in the name of its own feudal traditions, the restoration of the States of Normandy, as the peculiar privilege of that province so curiously were ideas, just boin into the world, enclosed and smathed in these remains of inhamity.

It was a tradition of the old monarchy that the Parliament should use in its remonstrances animated and almost violent language a certain exaggeration of words was conceded to it. The most absolute sovereigns had tolerated this hience of speech, by reason, indeed, of the powerlessness of those who uttered it as they were certain in the end to be reduced to obedience and compressed within nuriow limits, the indulgence of a fice utterince was readily left to them. The Parliament, moreover, was wont to make a great deal of noise for a small result, what it said went beyond what it menut this fianchise had become a sort of right of the magnistracy.

On this occasion the Parliament carried their ancient freedom to a degree of heence never heard before, for a new born fire was burning in their hearts and unconsciously inflamed their language Certainly, among the governments of our own time, which are almost all, nevertheless, governments maintained by the sword, not one could allow its ministers and its measures to be attacked in such terms by the representatives of its own authority

'Despotism, Siro,' said the Parliament of Paris 'is substituted for the laws of the realm, and the megistricy is no more than the instrument of arbitrary power. Would that Your Migesty could interrogate the victims of that power, confined forgotten in impenetrable pursons the abode of silence and injustice, those whom intigue, cupidity, the jealousy of power, the thirst of vengeance, the fear or the hatred of justice private pique or per sonal convenience have caused to be put there. Then drawing a purilled between two citizens one rich and the other poor, the latter being oppressed by the former, the Parliament added—'Is indigence then a crime?' Have flesh and blood no claims? Does aman without credit or a poor man cease to be a citizen.'

It was especially on the subject of favation and against the collectors of the revenue their, even in the edimest times, the judicial bodies were accustomed to inveigh with extreme violence. No sooner was the new tax announced it in the Pirhament of Paris declared it to be dissistence consternation followed the proposal, its adoption would give rise to a general mourning! The population, har used 13 fiscal exactions, were at their wits end?

¹ Hi toire du Gouverneu ent Français du 2 1 évrier 1787 au 31 D cembre. 2 I arlument de Norman I e 1787

To arrogate to one s self the power of levying tribute without the States General was to declare aloud that the covereign seeks not to be a king of France, but a king of serfs 1. The substance of the people was become the prey of the cupidity of courtiers and the ranacity of contractors 2.

Great as was the excitement of that time, it would still be very difficult to account for the language of these magistrates without recalling what had been said so many times before on the same subject. As under the old monarchy most of the taxes were levied on account of private persons who held them on farm, or by their agents, for centuries past men had accustomed themselves to look upon taxation as it bore on the private emolument of certain individuals and not as the common income of the nation. Taxes were commonly denounced as odious exactions. The salt duty was styled the upferral machine of the gabelle those who collected the taxes were spoken of as public robbers enriched by the poverty of everybody else. So said the tax pavers the courts of justice held the same language, and even the Government, which had leased to these very farmers the rights they exercised, scarcely spoke differently of them. It seemed as if their business was not its own and that it sought a way of escape amidst the clamour which pur sued its own agents.

When therefore, the Parliament of Paris spoke in this manner on the subject of taxes it merely followed an old and general practice. The play was the same but the audience was changed, and the clamour, instead of dying away as it had commonly done within the limit of the classes whom their privileges caused to be but little affected by taxition was now so load and so reiterated that it penetrated to those classes which bore the heariest burden and ere long filled them with indigration.

If the Parliament employed new arguments to vindicate its own rights, the Government employed arguments not less new in defence of its ancient prerogatives. For example in a pamphlet attributed to the Court which appeared about that time the following passage occurs — It is a question of printege which excites the Parliament. They want to retain their exemption from taxing times, the properties of the pro and means to raise 3

¹ Parlement de Toulouse ⁴ Août, ¹ A pamphlet ent tied Réclama t 87 tion du T ers État au Ro

^{*} Parlement de Beançon 1 8

Two men, in the course of this struggle, had especially distinguished themselves by the boldness of their specedes and by their revolutionary attitude these were M Goislard and M d Eprement It was resolved to arrest them. Then occurred a scene, the prelude, so to speak, of the great tragedy that was to follow, well calculated to exhibit an easy-going Government under the aspect of tyanny.

Informed of the resolution taken against them, these two magnetrates left their homes, and took refuge in the Parliament takelf, in the full diess of their Order, where they were lost amidst the crowd of judges forming that great body. The Palace of Justice was surrounded by troops, and the doors guarded. Viscount d Agoult, who commanded them, appeared alone in the great Chamber. The whole Parliament was assembled, and sitting in the most solemn form. The number of the judges, the venerable antiquity of the Court, the dignity of their dress, the simplicity of their demeanour, the extent of their power, the majesty of the very hall, filled with all the memorials of our history, all contributed to make the Parliament the greatest and most honoured thing in France, after the Throne.

In presence of such an Assembly the officer stood at first at gaze He was asked who sent him there He answered in rough but embarrassed accents, and demanded that the two members whom he was ordered to arrest should be pointed out to him The Parliament sat motionless and silent The officer withdrewre-entered-then withdrew again, the Parliament, still motionless and silent, neither resisting nor yielding. The time of year was that when the days are shortest Night came on The troops lit fires round the approaches to the Palace, as round a besieged fort The populace, astonished by so unwonted a sight surrounded them in crowds, but stood aloof the populace was touched but not yet excited and therefore stood aloof to contemplate, by the light of those beyoure fires, a scene so new and unwonted under the morarchy For there it might see how the oldest Government in Lurope applied itself to teach the people to outrage the majesty of the oldest institutions and to violate in their sanctuary the most august of ancient powers

This lasted till midnight when D Eprimenia at last rose. He thauked the Parliament for the effort it had made to save him the declined to trispass longer on the generous sympthy of his colleagues. He commended the commonwealth and his children to their care, and descending the steps of the court, surrendered thusself to the officer. It seemed as if he was leaving that assembly to mount the scaffold. The scaffold, indeed, he was one day to mount, but that was in other times and under other powers. The only living writtens of this stringe scene, Duke Pasquier, has told me that at these words of D Dprimenil the whole Assembly burst into tears, as if it had been Regulus marching out of Rome to return to the horrid death which awaited him in Carthage. The Marshal de Noailles sobbed aloud. Alas' how many tears were ere long to be shed on lofter wees than these. Such grief was no doubt exaggerated, but not unreal. At the commencement of a revolution the vivacity of emotions greatly exceeds the importance of events, as it the close of revolutions it falls short of them.

Having thus struck a blow at the whole body of the Parhaments, represented by their chief, it only remained to annihilate their power Six edicts were simultaneously published 1 These edicts, which roused all France, were designed to effect several of the most important and useful reforms which the Revolution has since accomplished the separation of the legislative and judicial powers, the abolition of exceptional courts of justice, and the establishment of all the principles which to this day, govern the judicial organisation of France, both civil and criminal All these reforms were conceived in the true spirit of the age, and met the real and lasting wants of society But as they were aimed at the privileged jurisdiction of the Parliaments, they struck down the idol of the hour, and they emanated from a power which was detested That was enough In the eyes of the nation these new edicts were a triumph of absolute government. The time had not yet come when everything may be pardoned by democracy to despotism in exchange for order and equality. In a moment the nation rose Each Parliament became at once a focus of resistance round which the Orders of the province grouped themselves, so as in the two first edicts. The third contained reforms of equal importance in cruminal and penal law. No capital section of the contained the co

¹ The object of the Fdiets which were sent down to the Parliament on the 8th May 1 88 is well known. The first and second of these established a new order of judicature. Exceptional new order of judicature. Exceptional war of the courts of justice were abouthed Small owners excitered over the country which were excitered over the country which series in the property which were established to hour appeals to six were established to hour appeals to six or riminal cases and on civil cases under 20000 livres in vilue the country of the property of the

to present a firm front to the action of the central power of government.

France was at that time divided, as is well known, into thirteen judicial provinces, each of which was attached to a Parliament. All these Parliaments were absolutely independent of one another, all of them had equal prerogatives, all of them were invested with the same right of discussing the mandates of the legislator before submitting to them This organisation will be seen to have been natural, on looking back to the time when most of these courts of justice were founded. The different parts of France were so dissimilar in their interests, their disposition, their customs, and their manners, that the same legislation could not be applied to all of them at once. As a distinct law was usually enacted for each province, it was natural that in each province there should be a Parliament whose duty it was to test this law. In more recent times, the French having become more similar, one law sufficed for all: but the right of testing the law remained divided.

An edict of the King applying equally to the whole of France, after it had been accepted and executed in a certain manner in one part of the territory, might still be modified or contested in the twelve other parts. That was the right, but that was not the custom. For a long period of time the separate Parliaments had ceased to contest anything, save the administrative rules, which might be peculiar to their own province. They did not debate the general laws of the kingdom, unless the peculiar interests of their own province seemed to be affected by some one of their provisions. As for the principle of such laws, their opportunity or efficiency, these were considerations they did not commonly entertain. On these points they were wont to rely on the Parliament of Paris, which, by a sort of tacit agreement, was looked up to by all the other Parliaments as their political guide.

other Parliaments as their political guide
On this occasion each Parliament chose to examine these edicts, or if they concerned its own province alone, and as if it had been the sole representative of France; each province chose, too, to distinguish itself by a separate resistance in the midst of the general resistance they encountered. All of these discussed the principle of each educt, as well as its special application. A clause which had been accepted without difficulty by one of these bodies was obstinately opposed elsewhere, one of them hardy notices what called forth the indignation of another. Assuled by thirteen adversaries at once, each of which attacked with different weepons and struck in different places, the Government, annots all these bodies, could not by its hand upon a single head.

But, what was even more remarkable than the diversity of these attacks, was the uniform intention which animated them I'nch of the thirteen courts struggled after its own fushion and upon its own soil, but the sentiment which excited them was identically the same. The remonstrance a made at that time by the different Parlaments, and published by them, would fill many columes, but open the book where you will, you seem to be reading the same page always the same thoughts expressed for the most part in the same words. All of them demanded the States-General in the name of the imprescriptible rights of the nation all of them approved the conduct of the Parliament of Paris, protested against the acts of violence directed against it, encouraged it to resist, and imitated, as well as it could, not only its measures, but the philosophical language of its opposition 'Subjects,' said the Parliament of Grenoble, have rights as well as the sovereign -rights which are essential to all who are not slaves' 'The just man, said the Parliament of Normands, 'does not change his principles when he changes his abode' 'The King,' said the Parliament of Besançon, 'cannot wish to have for his subjects humiliated slaves.' The turnult raised at the same time by all these magnetrates scattered over the surface of the country sounds. like the confused noise of a multitude listen attentively to what they are saying it is as the voice of one man

What is it then that the country was saying thus simultaneously? Everywhere you find the same ideas and the same expressions so that beneath the unity of the judicature you discover the unity of the nation and through this multiplicity of old institutions, of local customs of provincial privileges, of different usages, which seemed to sever Prance into so many different peoples, each living a separate life you discern one of the nations of the earth in which the greatest degree of similarity subsists between man and man This movement of the Purliaments, at once multiple and uniform, attacking like a crowd, striking like a single arm —this judicial insurrection was more dangerous to the Government than all other insurrections, even military revolt, because it turned against the Government that regular, civil, and moral power which is the habitual instrument of authority The strength of an army may coerce for a day, but the constant defence of Governments hes in courts of justice Another striking point in this resistance of the judicial bodies was not so much the mischief they themselves did to the Government, as that which they allowed to be done to it by others They established, for instance, the worst form of liberty of the press that, namely, which springs not from a right, but from the non-execution of the laws They introduced, too, the right of holding promiscious meetings, so that the different members of each Order and the Orders themselves could remove for a time the barrier which divided them, and concert a common course of action

¹ Tl ese citations are from offic al documents

CHAP III

affairs

Thus it was that all the Orders in each province engaged gradually in the struggle, but not all at the same time or in the The nobility were the first and boldest champions same manner in that contest against the absolute powers of the King 1 It was in the place of the aristocracy that absolute government had taken root they were the first to be humbled and annoved by some obscure agent of the central power, who, under the name of an Intendant, was sent perpetually to regulate and transact behind their backs the smallest local affairs they had produced not a few of the writers who had protested with the greatest energy against despotism, free institutions and the new opinions had almost everywhere found in the nobles their chief supporters Independently of their own grievances, they were carried away by the common pas ion which had become universal, as is demonstrated by the nature of their attacks. Their complaint was not that their peculiar privileges had been violated, but that the common law of the realm had been trampled under foot, the provincial Estates abolished, the States-General interrupted, the nation treated like a minor and the country deprived of the management of its own rights to d f nd them with us. I have he ard it with my own ears free cl ctions sequality of numbers country of taxation-every heart was touched by their disinterestedness and kindled by their natriotism 1

When public rejoicings took place at Granoble upon the news of the dismissal of the Archbishop of Sens, August 29th, 1788, the city was instantly illuminated and covered with transparencies on one of which the following lines were read -

> Nobles, your meritez le sort qui vous d'eor Do I f tat cl ancelant your (tes ! s soutiens In nation par yous valiriser ees liens D'al du pl is beau jour on voit briller l'aurore

In Brittans the nobles were reads to arm the peasants in order to re ist the Royal authorities, and at Paris when the first riot broke out (August 21th 1758) which was feebly and indecisively repressed by the army, a veral of the officers, who belonged as 19 well known, to the nobility, resigned their commissions rather than shed the blood of the people The Parliament complimented them on their conduct, and called them 'those noble and generous soldiers whom the purity and delicacy of their sentiments had compelled to resign their commissions 2

The opposition of the clergy was not less decided though more discreet It naturally assumed the forms appropriate to the cleri cal body When the Parliament of Paris was exiled to Troves and r ceived the homage of all the public bodies of that city, the Chapter of the Cathedral as the organ of the clergy, complimented the Parliament in the following terms - The vigour restored to tl e constitutional maxims of the monarchy has succeeded in defeat ing the territorial sulvidy and you have taught the Treasury to respect the sacred rights of property The general mourning of the nation and your own removal from your duties and from the bosom of your families were to us a poignant spectacle and whilst these august walls echoed the sounds of public grief we carried into the Sanctuary our private sorrow and our prayers -(Official Papers 1787)

Letter of Charles R to the Letter of Charles I:— to the Commons of Br t any 1788 Decree of September 2 th 1788 (Official documents) On the occasion of the part al r ot caused at Grenoble by the triumphant re urn of the Parlia ment (October 1°th 1788) the army ment (October 1ºth 1788) the army instead of repress ng t was incited by ts own officers to take part in the movement The officers of the regi ment (said an eve-witness) d d not show less ardour they wated in a body on the F rst Pres dent to express the joy they felt on his return. On this occasion we cannot refuse ourselves the pleasure of paying them a tribute of pra se Their pradence their hu man ty the r patriotism have earned for them the esteem of the city I th nk Bernadotte was serv ng n th s regiment and you ought to maintain it. And you, illustrious families! the monarchy has never ceased to flourish under your protection, you created it at the gost of your blood, you have many times saved it from the foreigner, save it now from internal enemies. Secure to your children the splendid benefits your fathers have handed down to you, the name of here is not honoured under a servite sky.

218 INCREASING RESISTANCE TO THE GOVI RAMENT BOOT HI

These sentiments might be sincere, one sole pission paramount to other pissions pervaded all classes numely, a spirit of opposition throughout, in simil as well as in great affairs, which struck at everything, and assumed all shapes, even those which disfigured it. Some, in order to resust the Government, laid stress on what remuined of old local fruichies. Here a man stood up for some old privilege of his class some secular right of his cilling or his corporation there another man forgetting his grevances and animosity against the privileged classes denounced an edict which he said would reduce to nothing the seignonial jurisdictions, and would thus strip the nobles of all the dignit of their fless.

In this violent straggle every min grasped, as if by chance the weapon nearest at hand even when it was the least suited to him. If one took note of all the pivileges all the exclusive rights all the old municipal and provincial franchises which were at this epoch claimed asserted and loudly demanded, the picture would be at once very exact and very deceptive, it would appear is if the object of the impending Revolution was not to destroy, but to restore the old order of society. So difficult is it for the individuals who are carried along by one of the great movements of human society to distinguish the true motive power amongst the causes by which they are themselves impelled. Who would have imagined that the impulse which caused so many traditional rights to be asserted was the very passion which was leading presistably to their entire abolition?

I bitel b tween May 8t 1 88 and te Restorate on of the lard uments 2 A single natance will saffice to show I ow the latter I of deeply an and publisher componite a interest consequence to be its claim plots. The saffice is the saffice of the saff may not the difference of n suners and castons brain about some difference in the laws? If it customs and franch set of each province are the patt many of all the subjects of the Crown. It is proposed to begrade and lesting the superior of the proposed to begrade and lesting the screed be rise of the not it. What conflex out What disorder! I'll locument was it is produced not the great he yest fortills (thermarks one if the cloth of the product on of the product of the product of the cloth of the product of the prod

CHAP IN INSURPECTIONARY MOYFUENT OF THE PEOPLY

Now let us close our ears for a moment to these tumulationals, proceeding from the middle and upper classes of nation, to catch, if we may, some whisper beginning to mak itself heard from the midst of the People No sign that I can discover from this distance of time announced that the rural population was at all agitated. The peasant plodded onwards in his worted track. That wast section of the nation was still neutral, and, as it were, unseen 1

Even in the towns the people remained a stringer to the excitement of the upper classes and indifferent to the stir which was going on above its head. They listen, they witch, with some surprise, but with more curiosity than anger. But no sooner did the agitation make itself falt among them than it was found to have assumed a new character. When the magistrates re-entered Paris in triumph, the people, which had done nothing to defend these members of Parliament, arrested in their places gathered together tumultuously to hall their return

I have said in another part of this book that nothing was more frequent under the old regime than nots. The Government was so strong that it willingly allowed these transient ebullitions to have free scope. But on this occasion there are numerous undications that a very different state of things had begun. It was a time when everything old assumed new features—nots like everything else. Corn nots had perpetually occurred in France, but they were made by mobs without order, object or consistence. Now, on the contrart, broke out insurrection as we have since so often witnessed it, with its toesin its nocturnal cries its sanguinary placards, a fierce and cruel apparition, a mob infuriated yet organised and directed to some end which rushes at once into civil war, and shatters every obstacle.

hold troops. Such was the early but terrible germ of the insurrections of the Revolution.1

220

The Reign of Terror was already visible in disguise. Paris, . which nowadays a hundred thousand men scarcely keep in order, was then protected by an indifferent sort of police called the watch Paris had in it neither barracks nor troops. The household troops and the Swiss Guards were quartered in the environs This time the watch was powerless.

In presence of so general and so novel an opposition, the Government showed signs at first of surprise and of annoyance rather than of defeat. It employed all its old weapons-proclamations, lettres de cachet, exile—but it employed them in vain. Force was resorted to, enough to urritate, not enough to terrify; moreover, a whole people cannot be terrified. An attempt was made to excite the passions of the multitude against the rich, the citizens against the aristocracy, the lower magistrates against the courts of justice. It was the old game; but this too was played in vain. New judges were appointed, but most of the new magistrates refused to sit. Favours, money were proffered; senality itself had given way to passion An effort was made to divert the public attention; but it remained concentrated. Unable to stop or even to check the liberty of writing, the Government sought to use it by opposing one press to another press. A number of little pamphlets were published on its side, at no small cost 2 Nobody read the defence, but the myriad pamphlets that attacked it were devoured. All these pamphlets were evolved from the abstract principles of Rousseau's Contrat Social. The Sovereign was to be a citizen king; every infraction of the law was treason against the nation. Nothing in the whole fabric of society was sound; the Court was a hateful den in which famished courtiers devoured the spoils of the people

At length an incident occurred which hurried on the crisis. The Parliament of Dauphiny had resisted like all the other Parliaments, and had been smitten like them all Rut nowhere did the cause which it defended find a more general sympathy or more resolute champions. Mutual class grievances were there perhaps more intense than in any other place; but the prevailing excitement lulled for a time all private passions; and, whereas in most of the other provinces each class carried on its warfare against the Government separately and without combination, in-Dauphiny they regularly constituted themselves into a political body and prepared for resistance. Dauphiny had enjoyed for ages its own States, which had been suspended in 1618, but not abolished A few nobles, a few priests, and a few citizens having met of their own accord in Grenoble, dared to call upon the nobility, the clergy, and the commons to meet as provincial Estates in a country-house near Grenoble, named Vizille This building was an old feudal castle, formerly the residence of the Dukes of Lesdiquières, but recently purchased by a new family, that of Péner, to whom it belongs to this day. No sooner had they met in this place, than the three Orders constituted themselves, and an air of regularity was thrown over their irregular proceedings. Forty-nine members of the clergy were present, two hundred and thirty-three members of the nobility, three hundred and minetyone of the commons The members of the whole meeting were counted; but not to divide the Orders, it was decided, without discussion, that the president should be chosen from one of the two higher Orders, and the secretary from the commons the Count de Morges was called to the chair, M Mounier was named secretary. The Assembly then proceeded to deliberate, and protested in a body against the Edicts of May and the suppression of the Parliament. They demanded the restoration of the old Estates of the province which had been arbitrarily and illegally suspended, they demanded that in these Estates a double number of representatives should be given to the commons, they called for the prompt convocation of the States-General, and decided that on the spot a letter should be addressed to the King stating their grievances and their demands. This letter, couclied in violent language and in a tone of civil war, was in fact immediately signed by all the members Similar protests had already been made, similar demands had been expressed with equal violence, but nowhere as vit had there been so signal an example of the union of all classes 'The members of the nobility and the clergy,' says the Journal of the House, 'were complimented by a member of the commons on the localty with which laying aside former pretensions, they had hastened to do justice to the commons, and on their zeal to support the union of the three Orders' The President replied that the peers would always be ready to act with their fellow-citizens for the salvation of the country '

²⁴th August, 1783 All the pam-phlets of the time laid down a theory prices of the time tant down a theory for insurrection. It is the business of the people to break the fetters laid apon it Every citizen is a soldier, &c. See 'Remarks on the Cabuset Order for suppressing discussions in opposition to the Edites of the 8th of May. (Bibliothèque, No 595)

^{*} Some of the authors of these papers favourable to Government we e said to be Beaumarchais, the Abbé Maury, Languet, the Abbé Mosellet, &c The. Abbé Mauy alone was said to be re-ceiving a pension of 22,000 francs ('Lettres d'un Français rétiré à Lon-dres,' July 1788)

The Assembly of Vizille produced an amazing effect through out France It was the last time that an event happening else where than in Paris has exercised a great influence on the general destinies of the country The Government feared that what Dauphiny had dared to do might be imitated everywhere De spuring at last of conquering the resistance opposed to it it declared itself beaten Louis XVI dismissed his ministers abo lished or suspended his edicts recalled the Parliaments and granted the States General This was not, it must be well remarked a concession made by the King on a point of detail it was a renun ciation of absolute power at was a participation in the Government that he admitted and secured to the country by at length conceding in carnest the States General One is astonished in reading the writings of that time to find them speaking of a great revolution already accomplished before 1789 It was in truth a great revolu tion but one destined to be swallowed up and lost in the immensity of the Revolution about to follow

Numerous indeed and prodigious in extent were the faults that had to be committed to bring affairs to the state they then were in But the Government of Louis XVI having allowed itself to be driven to such a point cannot be condemned for giving way. No means of resistance were at its disposal. Material force it could not use as the army lent a reluctant a nerveless support to its policy. The law it could not use for the courts of justice were in opposition. In the old kingdom of France moreover the qb-solute power of the Crown had never had a force of its own nor possessed instruments depending solely on itself. It had never as in ed the aspect of military tyranny it was not born in camps and never lad recourse to arms. It was essentially a civil power a work not of violence but of art. This Government was so organised as

In the meetings will childwest of truling and which took place of the rat Grenoble or at his Lambert, or at Romans it is some no mea main tained and lirews closer. The nobility and the clergy stead by dem nobel that the commons of the common of the com get your anxiety to lo us ji tee 5 m lar compl ments were reneed at an Assembly mil to leid at Pomuns on November in 1 1788 In a letter and dressel to the Munic pal lites of Dnit tany an inhab tant of Dunpl in whites I have seen the clergy and it o noblifty renounce will a far new worth of all

Thave seen the clergy and it o nobility renounce with a far ress worth; of all respect ther oil pretensions in the state and number by acknowled to the only of the country of the country

CITY III THE GOVERNMENT INCAPABLE OF RESISTANCE 223 easily to overpower individual resistance but its constitution its precedents, its habits, and those of the nation forbide it to govern against a majority in opposition The power of the Crown had only been established by dividing classes by hedging them round with the prejudices, the jealousies, the hatreds, peculiar to each of them, so as never to have to do with more than one class at once and to bring the weight of all the others to bear against it sooner had these different classes, sinking for a moment the barriers by which they had been divided, met and agreed upon a common resistance, though but for a single day, than the absolute power of the Government was conquered The Assembly of Vizille was the outward and visible sign of this new union and of what it might bring to fiass And although this occurrence took place in the depths of a small province and in a corner of the Alps at thus became the principal event of the time. It exhibited to every eve that which had been as yet visible but to few, and in a moment it decided the victory

CHAPTER IV

THE PARLIAMENTS DISCOVER THAT THEY HAVE LASTERS OF THE KINGDOM

WHEN the Royal authority had been conquered, the Parliaments at first conceived that the triumph was their own. They returned to the bench, less as reprieved delinquents than as conquerors, and thought that they had only to enjoy the sweets of victory

The King when he withdraw the edicts which had raised to the bench new judges, ordered that at least the judgents and decrees of those judges should be maintained. The Purliaments declared that whatever had been adjudged without themselves was not adjudged at all. They summoned before them the insolent magistrates who had presumed to aspire to their seats, and, borrowing in old expression of medieval law to meet this novel micident, they nited them infamous. All Prance eaw that the Kings friends were punished for their fidelity to the Crown, and learnt that henceforth safety was not to be found on the side of obedience.

The intercation of these magistrates may easily be understood Louis XIV in all his glory had never been the object of more universal adulation, if that word can be applied to immederate praise prompted by genuine and disinterested passions

The Parliament of Paris, exiled to Troyes, was received in that city by all the public bodies, which hastened to pay it the homage due to the sovereign, and to utter to its face the most extravagant compliments. 'August senators' they said, generous vitrens' strict and compassionate magistrates' you all deserve in every Prench heart the title of fathers of your country. You are the consolation of the nations ills. Your actions are sublime examples of energy and patriotism. The French nation looks up n you with tenderness and varietion. The Chapter of the Cathedral of Troyes, complimenting them in the name of the Church said. Our country and our religion solicit some dumble monument of what you have done. I went to the true restriction forth, in going in vain. The amazement of the judges was extreme; they were totally unable to comprehend what was happening before their eves. They continued to speak of the constitution to be defended, not seeing that this word was popular enough when the constitution

CHAP, IV ATTEMPT OF PARLIAMENT TO REGAIN FAVOUR 227

. was opposed to the King, but hateful to public opinion when it was opposed to equality. They condemned a publication which attacked the old institutions of the kingdom to be burnt by the common hangman, not perceiving that the ruin of these institutions was precisely what was desired. They asked of one another what could possibly have brought about such a change in the public mind. They fancied they had a strength of their own, not being aware that they had only been the blind auxiliaries of another power: everything, as long as that power made them its instruments; nothing, as soon as, being able to act on its own behalf, it ceased to need their assistance. They did not see that the same wave which had driven them along, and raised them so high, carried them back with

Originally the Parliament consisted of jurists and advocates chosen by the King from the ablest members of their profession. A path to honours and to the highest offices of State was thus opened by merit to men born in the humblest conditions of fortune Parliament was then, with the Church, one of those powerful democratic institutions, which were born and had implanted themselves on the aristocratic soil of the Middle Ages

it as it retired.

Ministers, for personal freedom, for the liberty of the press: all was periodical sessions of the States-General, for the responsibility of

CHAPTER A

AESOLUTE POWER BEING SUBDUED, THE TRUE SPIRIT OF THE REVOLUTION FORTHWITH RECAME MANIFEST

The bond of a common passion had for an instant linked all classes together No sooner was that bond relaxed than they flew asunder, and the venitable spirit of the Revolution, disguised before was suddenly unveiled After the triumph which had been obtained over the King the next thing was to ascertain who should win the fruits of the victory, the States-General having been con ceded who should predominate in that assembly The King could no longer refuse to convoke them, but he had still the power to determine the form they were to assume. One hundred and seventy-five years had elap-ed since their last meeting. They had become a mere indistinct tradition. None knew precisely what should be the number of the deputies, the mutual relations of the three Orders, the mode of election the forms of deliberation king alone could have settled these questions he did not settle them After having allowed the disputed powers which he sought to return to be snatched away from him he failed to use those which were not disputed

230

All the local powers deliberated on the answer to be given to the King All the corporate bodies put in their claims All classes endersoured to rake up from the ruins of the old States General the forms which seemed best adapted to secure their own peculiar interests Livery one had something to say, and as France was the most literary country in Lurope there was a deluge of publi cations The conflict of classes was inevitable, but that conflict which should naturally have been reserved for the States General themselves where it might have been lept within bounds when it prose on given questions finding a boundless field before it and being f d by general controversy, speedily assumed a degree of strange boldness and excessive violence to be accounted for by the secret excitement of the public mind but which no external symptom had as yet prepared men for Between the time when the king renounced his absolute authority and the commencement of the elections about five months elapsed In this interval little was changed in the actual state of things but the movement which was driving the French nation to a total subversion of society dashed onwards with increasing velocity

At first nothing was talked of but the constitution of the States General hig books were hastily filled with crude erudition in which an attempt was made to reconcile the traditions of the Middle Ages with the demands of the present time then the ques tion of the old States General was dropped. This heap of mouldy precedents was flung aside and it was asked what on general and abstract principles the legislative power ought to be At each step the horizon extended beyond the constitution of the legis lature the d scuss on embraced the whole framework of govern ment beyond the frame of government the whole fabric of society was to be shaken to its foundations. At first men stoke of a better ponderation of powers a better adjustment of the rights of classes but soon they advanced they harried they rushed to pure democracy At first Montesquien was cited and discussed at last Roussean was the only authority he and he alone became and was to ren am the Teacher of the first age of the Revolut on The old r f ne was still in complete existence, and already the institu tions of England were deemed superannuat d and mad quate The root of every incident that followed was implanted in mens minds Scarcely an opinion was professed in the whole cours of tle Revolution which might not already be trac d in its g rm there was not an idea realised by the Revolution that son e tl cory had not at once reache I an I even surpassed such was the keynote of the whole controversy. Nobody dreamed that the conce sion of political rights could be determined by any other element than that of number 'What can be more absurd,' exclaims a writer who was one of the most moderate of the time. 'than that a body which has twenty millions of heads should be represented in the same manner as one which has an hundred thou and ?' After having shown that there were in France eighty thousand eccle-justics and about a hundred and twenty thousand nobles, Sicres merely adds, 'Compare this number of these two hundred thousand privileged persons to that of twenty-six million ouls, and judge the question '?

'In all things the impority of numbers is to give the law

The most timid among the innovators of the Revolution, those who wished that the reasonable prerognitives of the different Orders should be re-pected, talked, nevertheless, as if there were neither class nor Order, and still took the numerical majority as the sole basis of their calculations. Everybody framed his own statistics, but all was statistical 'The relation of privileged persons to those not privileged,' said Lafon-Ladebat, 'is as one to twenty-two's According to the city of Bourg.5 the commons formed nineteentwentieths of the population, according to the city of Nimes,6 twenty-nine thirtieths. It was, as you see, a mere question of figures From this political arithmetic, Volney deduced, as a natural consequence, universal suffrage, 7 Roederer, universal eligibility . 9 Pethion, the unity of the assembly 9

Many of the e writer, in drawing out their figure, knew nothing of the quotient and the calculation frequently led them beyond their hopes, and even beyond their wishes

The most striking thing, at this passionate epoch, was not so much the passions which broke forth, as the power of the opinions that prevailed, and the opinion that prevailed above all others was, that not only there were no privileges, but even that there were no private right. Even those who professed the largest consideration for privileges and private rights considered such privileges and rights as wholly indefensible—not only those exercised in their own time, but those existing at any time and in any

^{&#}x27; 'Le Tiers-État au Eoi,' by M Louchet, December '0th 1788

Quest-ce-que le Tiers ? p. 53. Lacretelle 'Convocation des États Généraux , Bertrand de Volleville Observations adressées à l'Assemblee des Notables.

[·] Observations lues aux represen tants du Tiers État à Bordeaux, De comber, 1738

^{*} Bequete du Tiers État de la ville

de Bourg December 1 89.

• Délibérations de la ville de Nimes en Conseil genéral.

Des conditions necessaires à la

l'orlité des États-Generaux.
De la deputation aux États-Gené-

^{*} Avis a...x Fringus, 1°99 A pam phlet written in 1 % but full of the true revolutionary spirit of 1799

country. The conception of a temp rate and ponderated Government, that is to say, of a Government in which the different classes of secrets, and the different interests which divide them, balance each other—in which men are weighed not only as individuals, but by reason of their property, their patronage, and their influence in the scale of the common weal,—these conceptions were wanting in the mind of the multimele, they were replaced by the notion of a crowd, consisting of smaller claim its, and they wish supers ded by roles not as the representatives of interests or of persons, but of numerical force!

Another thing well worthy of remark in this singular movement of the mind, was its pace, at first so easy and regulated, at last so headlong and impetuous. A few months' interval marked this difference. Read what was written in the first weeks of 1788 by the keenest opponents of the old reprint, you will be struck by the forbe arance of their language their take the publications of the most moderate reform is in the last five months of the same year, you will find them revolutionary The Government had challenged discussion on itself no bounds therefore would be set to the theme The same impulse which had been given to opinions soon drove the pissions of the nation with furious rapidity in the same direction. At first the commons complained that the nobility carried their rights too fir Later on the existence of any such rights was denied. At first it was proposed to share power with the upper classes soon all power was refused to them The aristocracy was to become a sort of extraneous substance in the uniform texture of the nation . Some said the privileged classes were a hundred thousand, some that they were five hundred thousand All agreed in thinking that they formed a mere handful foreign to the rest of the nation, only to be tolerated in the interest of public tranquillity 'Take away in your imagination, said Rabaut Saint-Etienne, 'the whole of the clergy—take away even the whole nobility, there still remains the nation The commons were a complete social body all the rest was vain superfluity not only the nobles had no right to be masters of the rest, they had scarcely the right to be their fellow-

¹ Mounter h mself was just as little able as the most volent collections who were soon to appreciations who were soon to appreciate formers the idea of rights derived from the past of political usages and enterthe past of political usages and enterthe which are in reality laws though me written and only to be touched with custom of interests to be respected.

and very gradually modified w the it causing a rupture between that which his been and that which is to be—the idea, in short which is the first principle of pract cal and regular political liberty See Mounters Rouvelles Observations For the first time perhaps in the history of the world, the upper classes had separated and isolated themselves to such a degree from all other classes, that their members could be counted one by one and set apart like sheep draughted-from a flock: whilst the middle classes were bent on not mixing with the class above them, but, on the contrary, stood carefully aloof from all contact. These two symptoms, had they been understood, would have revealed the immensity of the Revolution which was about to take place, or rather which was already made.

Now follow the movement of passion in the track of opinion. At first hatred was expressed against privileges, none against persons. But by degrees the tone becomes more bitter, emulation becomes jealousy, enunity becomes detestation, a thousand conflicting associations are piled together to form the mighty mass which a thousand arms are at once to lift, and drop upon the head of the aristocracy so as to crush it.

The privileged ranks were attacked in countless publications. They were defended in so few, that it is somewhat difficult to ascertain what was said in their favour. It may seem surprising that the assailed classes, holding most of the great offices of State and owning a large portion of the land of the country, should have found so few defenders, though so many eloquent voices have pleaded their cause since they have been conquered, decimated, ruined. But this is explained by the extreme confusion into which the aristocracy was thrown, when the rest of the nation, having proceeded for a time in the track marked out by itself, suddenly turned against it. With astonishment, it perceived that the opinions used to attack it were its own opinions. The notions which compassed its annihilation were familiar to its own mind. What had been the amusement of aristocratic leisure became a terrible weapon against aristocratic society. In common with their adversaries, these nobles were ready enough to believe that the most perfect form of society would be that most nearly akin to the natural equality of man; in which merit alone, and not either birth or fortune, should determine rank; and in which government would be a simple contract, and law the creation of a numerical majority. They knew nothing of politics but what they had read in books, and in the same books; the only difference was that one party was bent on trying a great social experiment, which must be made at the expense of the other party. But, though their interests were different, their opinions were the same: those same patricians would have made the Revolution if they had been born plebeians.

When therefore they suddenly found themselves attacked, they

two other Order so that the total number of its deputies should be count to those of the nobility and clergy combined?

2 Were the Orders to deliberate together or separately?

This reduplication of the commons and the fusion of the three Orders in one assembly appeared, at the time to be things less novel and less important than they were in reality. Some minor circumstances which had long existed or were then in existence, concealed their novelty and their magnitude. For ages the provincial Estates of Languedoc had been composed and had sat in this manner, with no other result than that of giving to the middle class a larger share of public business and of creating common interests and greater facility of intercourse between that class and the two higher Orders This example had been copied subsequently, in the two or three provincial assemblies which were held in 1779 instead of dividing the classes it had been found to draw them to ether

The King himself appeared to have declared in favour of this system, for he had just applied it to the provincial assemblies which the last edict had called into being in all the provinces laving previously no Estates of their own (1788) It was still im perfectly seen without a clear perception of the fact that an institution which had only modified the ancient constitution of the country, when established in a single province could not ful to bring about its total and violent overthrow the moment it was applied to the whole State It was evident that the commons if equal in number to the two other Orders in the General Assembly of the nation, must instantly preponderate there -not as participating in their business, but as the supreme master of it. For the com mons would stand united between two bodies, not only divided against each other but divided against themselves-the commons having the same interests the same passions, the same object he two other Orders having different interests different objects and frequently different passions these hiving the current of public opinion in their favour those having it against them This Preference from without could not fail to drive a certain number of nobles and priests to join the commons so that whilst it banded all the commons together it detached from the nobility and the clergy all those who were aiming at popularity or seeking to track out a new road to power

In the States of Languedoc at was common to see the commons forsake their own body to vote with the nobles and the bishops, because the established influence of aristocracy still prevailing in their opinions and manners weighed upon them. But h re the reverse necessarily occurred, and the commons necessarily found themselves in a majority, although the number of their own representatives was the same

The action of such a party in the Assembly could not fail to be, not only preponderating, but violent, for it was sure to encounter there all that could excite the passions of min. To bring parties to live together in a conflict of opposite opinions is no easy task. But to enclose in the sume arena political bodies, already formed, completely organised, each having its proper origin, its past, its traditions, its peculiar usages, its spirit of union—to plant them apart, always in presence of each other, and to compel them to carry on an incessant debate, with no medium between them is not to provoke discussion but war

Moreover, thus majority, inflamed by its own passions and the passions of its anti-gonists, was all powerful Nothing could, I will not say arrest but retard its movements, for nothing remained to check it but the power of the Crown, already disarmed, and in cytably destined to yield to the strain of a single Assembly concentrated against itself.

centrated against itself

This was not to transpose gradually the balance of power, but to upset it. It was not to import to the commons a share in the exorbitant rights of the aristocracy, but suddenly to transfer unbounded power to other hands—to abandon the guidance of affairs to a single passion a single idea, a single interest. This was not a reform, but a revolution. Monner, who, alone among the reformers of that time seems to have settled in his own mind what it was he wished to effect and what were the conditions of a rigilar and five government,—Monnier who in his plan of government had advised the three Orders was nevertheless favourable to this union of them, and for this ideas that what was winted before all things was an assembly to destroy the remains of the old constitution all special privileges and all local privileges, which could giver be done with an Upper House composed of the nobles and

It would seem at any rate that the reduplication of the votes of the commons and the fusion of the three Orders in one body must have been questions inerpriable from each other, for to what end should the number of representatives of the commons be augmented if that branch of the Assembly was to debute and vote apart from the other two?

M Necker thought proper to sparate these questions. No doubt he desired both the reduplication of the commons and that the three Orders should vote together. It is very probable that the King leaned in the same direction. By the aristocracy he had just been conquered. It was the aristocracy which presed him hardest, which had roused the other classes against the royal authority, and had led them to victory. These blows had been felt, and the King had not sufficient penetration to perceive that his adversaries would soon be compelled to defend him, and that his friends would become his masters. Louis XVI therefore, like his minister, was inclined to constitute the State-General in the manner which the commons desired. But they were afraid to go far. They stopped half-way, not from any clear perception of their danger, but confused by the inarticulate channour around them. What man or what class has ever had the penetration to see when it became necessary to come down from a lofty pinnacle, in order to avoid being harded.

It was then decided that the commons should return twice as many members as each of the other Orders, but the question of the vote in common was left unsettled Of all courses of action,

this was certainly the most dangerous

Nothing contributes more to the maintenance of despotism than the division and mutual rivalry of classes. Absolute power lives on them on condition, however, that these divisions are confined to a pacific bitterness, that men envi their neighbours without excessive hatred, and that these classes, though separated are not in arms. But every Government must perish in the midst of a violent collision of classes, when once they have begun to make will one only other.

No doubt, it was very late in the day to seek to maintain the old constitution of the States General, even if it were reformed But this resolution, however rash was supported by the law of the land, which had still some authority The Government had tradition in its favour, and still had its hand upon the instrument of the law If the double number of the commons and the vote of the three Orders in common had been conceded at once no doubt a revolution would have been made, but it would have been made by the Crown, which by pulling down these old institutions it elf might have deadened their fall. The upper classes must have submitted to an inevitable necessity Borne in by the pressure of the Crown, simultaneously with that of the commons, they would at once have acknowledged their mability to resist Despuring of their own ascendency, they would only have contended for equal rights and would have learnt the lesson of fighting to save something instead of fighting to retain everything

Would it not have been possible to do throughout France what of the earth, at the power of it, which has more or less been felt If I turn to the Court, which had so great a share by all nations in the Revolution, I perceive there some of the most trivial scenes in history-a king, who had no greatness save that of his virtues, and those not the virtues of a king , hairbrained or narrow minded ministers dissolute priests, rish or money seeling courtiers, futile women who held in their hands the destinies of the human race

Yet these pultry personages set going, push on, precipitate prodigious events They themselves have little share in them themselves are mere accidents They might almost pass for primal causes. And I marvel at the Almighty Power which, with levers as short as these, can set rolling the mass of human society

CHAPTER VI

THE PREPARATION OF THE INSTRUCTIONS TO THE MEMBERS OF THE STATES-GENERAL DROVF THE CONCEPTION OF A RADICAL TRENO LUTION HOME 470, THE MIND OF THE PEOPLE

Almost all the institutions of the Middle Ages had a stamp of boldness and truth Those laws were imperfect, but they were They had little art, but they had less cunning They always gave all the rights they seemed to promise commons were convoked to form part of the assembles of the nation, they were at the same time invested with unbounded freedom in making known their complaints and in sending up their requests In the cities which were to send deputies to the States-General, the whole people was called upon to say what it thought of the abuses to be corrected and the demands to be made None were excluded from the right of complaint, and any man might express his grievance in his own way The means were as simple as the political device was bold Down to the States General of 1611, in all the towns and even in Paris, a large box was placed in the market place with a slit in it, to receive the papers and opinions of all men, which a committee sitting at the Hôtel de Ville was empowered to sift and examine Out of all these diverse remonstrances a bill was drawn up, which expressed the nublic grievances and the complaint of each individual.

The physical and social constitution of that time was based on such deep and solid foundations, that this sort of public inquest could take place without shirking it. There was no question of changing the principle of the laws but simply of putting their straight. Moreover what were then stield the commons were the burgesses of certain towns. The people of the towns might enjoy an entire liberty in the expression of their wrongs, because they were not in a condition to enforce redress they exercised without inconvenience that amount of democratic freedom because in all other respects the aristocracy reigned supreme. The communities of the Middle Ages were anisocratic bolles, which merely fragments of democracy.

CHAP, AL. CONSTITUTION OF THE NEW STATES-GENERAL 241 contained (and this contributed to their greatness) some small

In 1789, the commons who were to be represented in the States-General no longer consisted of the burgesses of the towns alone, as was the case in 1614, but of twenty millions of peasants scattered over the whole area of the kingdom. These had till then never taken any part in public affairs. Political life was not to them even the casual reminiscence of another age: it was, in all respects, a novelty. Nevertheless, on a given day, the inhabitants of each of the rural parishes of France, collected by the sound of the church bells on the market-place in front of the church, proceeded, for the first time since the commencement of the monarchy, to confer together in order to draw up what was called the cahier of their representatives 1 ٠, of the days of forced labour on which he had been compelled to work without wages. One spoke of the lord's pigeons which had picked his seed from the ground before it sprouted, another of the ralbits which had nibbled his green corn. As their excitement grow by the mutual relation of their wretchedness, all these different evils seemed to them to proceed, not so much from institutions, as from that single person, who still called them his subject though he had long ceased to govern them—who was the creature of privileges without obligations and retained none of his political rights but that of living at their cost, and they more and more agreed in considering lim as their common enemy Providence, which had resolved that the spectacle of our passions and our calamities should be the lesson of the world permitted the commencement of the Revolution to coincide with a great scarcity and an extraordinary winter The harvest of 1788 was short, and the first months of the winter of 1789 were marked by cold of unparalleled severity-a frost like that which is felt in the northern extremity of Europe hardened the earth to a great depth For two months the whole of France lay hidden under a thick fall of snow, like the steppes of Siberia. The atmosphere was congealed the sky dull and sad and this accident of nature gave a gloomier and fiercer tone to the passions of man All the grievances which might be urged against the institutions of the country and those who ruled by those institutions were felt more bitterly amidst the cold and want that prevailed and when the peasant left his scarcely burning hearth and his chill and maked abode with a famishel and frozen family, to meet his fellows and discuss their common cond tion of life it cost him no effort to dis cover the cause of all his calamities and he fancied that he could easily if he dared put his finger on the source of all his wrongs

CHAPTER VII

HOW, ON THE FVE OF THE CONVOCATION OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY, THE MIND OF THE NATION WAS MORE ENLARGED, AND ITS SPIRIT RAISED

Two questions had thus far divided all classes-that of the reduplication of the commons, and that of the voting of the Orders in one body the first was settled, the second was postponed As embly which every man had regarded in his own heart as the fulfilment of his hopes, and which all had demanded with equal fervour, was about to meet The event had long been anticipated To the last it seemed doubtful It came at length Preparation was passing into reality, speech into action. At that solemn moment all paused to consider the greatness of the undertakingin recount to discern the bearing of what was to be done, and to measure the effort which the work required Nobles, clergy, and citizens alike distinctly perceived that the object was not to modify this or that hat, but to remodel all laws, to breathe a new spirit into them, to impart to all of them new purposes and a new course No due hips as yet exactly what would be destroyed, or what would be created, but all felt that immense ruins would be made, and immense structures raised. Nor was this the limit of public confilence. None doubted that the destiny of mankind was engaged in the work about to be accomplished different and more perfect than had been seen before. The confidence of the I rench in themselves and in the superiority of their own reason was unbound d—a great cruse of their mistakes, but also of their minitable energy. What was applicable to themselves alone would be equally applicable to all men. Not a I ranch man but was convinced that not only was the government of I rance to be changed, but now principle so of government were to be introduced into the world, applicable to all the nations of the earth, and destined to regenerate the sum of human affairs. Lever min magnied that he held in his hand not only the fate of his country, but that of his species. All believed that there existed for man kind, whatever might be their conflicted, but there existed for man kind, whatever might be their conflicted, but one sovereign method of government, dictated by grason. The same institutions were held to be good for all conflicted and for any people. Whatever government was not approved by the human reason was to be destroyed and sup-readed by the logical institutions to be adopted, first by the I reach and afterwards by the human rice.

911

first by the Irench and afterwards by the human race

The magnitude, the beauty, and the risks of such an enterprise captivated and ravished the imagination of the whole French people. In presence of this immense design, each individual completely forgot himself The illusion lasted but for a moment but that moment was perhaps unexampled in the existence of any people. It o educated classes had nothing of the timorous and servile spirit which they have since learnt from revolutions For some time past they had ceased to fear the power of the Crown, they had not yet learned to dread the power of the people grandeur of their design rendered them intremd Reforms already accompl shed had caused a certain amount of private suffering this they were resigned The reforms which were inevitable must alter the condition of thousands of human beings that was not thought of The uncertainty of the future had already checked the course of trade and paralysed the exertions of industry neither privations nor suffering extinguished their ardour All these private calamities disappeared in the eyes even of those who suffered by them in the splendour of the common enterprise The love of well being which was one day to reign supreme over all other passions was then but a subordinate and feeble predilection neither his time nor his property nor his life I hasten to recoid these virtues of our forefathers for the present age which is already incapable of imitating them will soon be incapable of understanding them

"CHAP YII

. At that time, the nation, in every rank, sought to be free To-doubt its ability for self-government would have seemed a strange impertmence, and no-phrase-maker of that day would have dared to tell the people that, for their own happiness and safety, their hands must be tied and their authority placed in leading strings Ere they can listen to such language, nations must be reduced to think more humbly of themselves

The passions which had just been so violently excited between the various classes of society seemed of themselves to cool down at the moment when for the first time in two centuries these classes were about to act-together. All had demanded with equal furrour the restoration of the great Assembly then new born Each of them saw mighat event the means of realising its fondest hopes Tha State s Gineral were to meet at last! A comnton gladness filled those divided hearts and knit them together for an instant before they separated for ever

All minds were struck by the peril of disunion A sovereign effort was made to agree Instead of dwelling on the causes of difference men applied themselves to consider what all alil e desired the destruction of arbitrary power the self government of the nation, the recognition of the rights of every citizen, liberty of the press personal freedom, the mitigation of the law, a stronger administration of justice, religious toleration the abolition of restraint on labour and human industry—these were all things demanded by all This, at least, was remembered this was a ground of common resouring

I think no epoch of history has seen on any spot on the globe, so large a number of men so passionately devoted to the public good so honestly forgetful of themselves so absorbed in the con templation of the common interest so resolved to risk all they cherished in life to secure it. This it is which gave to the opening of the year 1789 an incomparable grandeur. This was the general source of passion courage and patriotism from which all the great deeds of the Revolution took their rise The scene was a short one but it will never depart from the memory of man kind The distance from which we look back to it is not the only cause of its apparent greatness it seemed as great to all those who lived in it All foreign nations saw it hailed it were moved by it There is no corner of Europe so secluded that the glow of admiration and of hope did not reach it In the vast series of memoirs left to us by the contemporaries of the Revolu tion I have met with none in which the recollection of the first days of 1789 has not left imperishable traces, everywhere it 216 MAGNANIMITY OF THE LUINCH NATION BOOK III kindled the fre liness clearness and vivacity of the inforessions of veuth

I venture to add that there is but one people on the earth which could have played this part . I I now my country-I know but too well its mistakes, its faults its foibles and its sins But I know, too, of what it is capable. There are undertal ings which the I rench nation can alone accomplish, there are magnanimous resolutions which this nation can alone conceive I rance alone may, on some given day, take in hand the common cause and stand up in defence of it, and if she be sullect to awful reverses, she has also moments of sublime enthusiasm which bear her aloft to heights which no other people will ever reach

NOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS!

Note (I)-Page 12 line 18

THE POWER OF THE FOMAN LAW IN GERMANY -THE MANNER IN WHICH IT HAD SUPERSEDED THE GERMANIC LAW

Towards the end of the Middle Ages the Roman law became the principal and almost the sole study of the Ger man legists, indeed at this time most of them pursued their education out of Germany in the Italian um versities. These legists though not the masters of political society, were charged with the explanation and application of its laws, and though they could not abolish the Germanic law, they altered and disfigured it so as to fit into the frame of the Roman They applied the Roman law to everything in the German institu tions that seemed to have the most remote analogy with the legislation of Justinian, and they thus introduced a new spirit and new usage into the national legislation by de grees it was so completely trans formed that it was no longer re cognicable and in the seventeenth century, for instance it was almost unknown It had been replaced by a nondescript something which was German indeed in name but Roman in fact I find reason to believe that owing to these efforts of the legists the con dition of ancient Germanic society deteriorated in many respects especirilly so far as the peasants were con cerned many of those who had suc ceeded until then in preserving the whole or part of their liberties or of their possessions, lost them at this period by learnel assimilations of their condition to that of the Roman bondsmen or emi hyteotes. This gradual transformation of the national law, and the vain efforts which were made to oppose it may be clearly traced in the history of Wurtemberg

From the origin of the county of that name in 12.00 until the creation of the duchy in 1495 the legislation was purely indigenous, it was com posed of customs and local laws made by the towns or by the Courts of Seignory, and of statutes promulgated by the Estates, ecclesiastical affairs alone were regulated by a foreign code the canon law

From 1495 the character of the legislation was changed the Roman law began to | enetrate the doctors as they were called those who had studied law in the foreign schools entered the Government and posscased themselves of the direction of the superior courts During the whole of the first half of the sixteenth century political secrety maintained the same struggle against them that was going on in England at the same tune but with very different success. At the dict of Tubingen in 1514 and at those which succeeded it the re presentatives of feudalism and the der uties of the towns made all kinds of representations against that which was taking place, they attacked the legists who were invading all the courts and changing the spirit or the letter of all customs and laws

The advantage at first seemed on Government the 1 romise that hence f rth the high courts should be com pose I of I onourable an I enlightened

they obtained from the

These Not a gad I lustrations were trans ated by the late Lady Duff (orden.

their side

to subsist This victory of a foreign over the in ligenous law is ascribed by many German historians to two causes -I To the movement which at that period attracted all min ls towards the languages and literature of antiquity, and the contempt which this impired for the intellectual produc tions of the national genius. 2 To the idea which had always possessed the whole of the Midlle Ages in Germany and which distlys itself even in the legislation of that perio I that the Holy Empire was the con tunuation of the Roman Empire and that the legislation of the former was an inheritance derived from the latter

These causes however are not sufficient to explain why the same law should at the same period have been introduced into the whole continent of Luroje. I believe that this trit is from the fact that at this time the all solute power of the socrecipism was overywhere excludibled on the runs of the ancient liberties of Turope' and that the Homin law, a law of servitu le, was admirably hited to second their lews.

to second their views The Roman law which every where perfected civil society tended everywhere to degrade political so ciety, masmuch as it was chiefly the production of a highly civilised but much enslave I people The kings of Europe accordingly adopted it with cagerness and establishe lit wherever they were the masters Throughout Europe the interpreters of this law became their ministers or their chief agents When called on to do so the legists even gave them the support of the law against the law itself and they have frequently done so since Wherever there was a sovereign who violated the laws we shall generally fin l at his side a legist who assured him that nothing was more lawful and who prove I most learnedly that his violence was just and that the oppressed party was in the wrong

Note (II)-Page 13 line 37

THE TRANSITION FROM FEUDAL TO DEMOCRATIC MONARCHY

As all monarchies had become absolute about the same period it as scarcely probable that the change of constitution was owing the monarchies and a secondary occurred at the same alify occurred at the same alify occurred at the same and contemporary events must have been produced by some general cause which samultaneously acted every where in the same manner.

This general cause was the transi tion from one state of society to another from feudal inequality to de mocratic equality The nobility was already depressed and the people were not yet raised, the former were brought too low and the latter were not sufficiently high to restrain the action of the ruling power. For a hundred and fifty years kings and princes enjoyed a sort of golden age, during which they possessed at once stability and unlimited power two things which are usually incompati ble they were as sacred as the here ditary chiefs of a feudal monarchy, and as absolute as the rulers of a de mocratic society

Note (III)—Page 14 line 25

DECAL OF THE FREE TOWNS OF GERMANY -- IMPERIAL TOWNS (REICHSTÄDTE)

According to the German his torians the period of the greatest splendour of these towns was during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries They were then the abode of wealth of the arts and sciences-masters of the commerce of Eurore-the most powerful centres of civilisation the north and in the south of Ger many especially they had ended by forming independent confederations with the surrounding nobles as the towns in Switzerland had done with the peasants

In the sixteenth century they still enjoyed the same prosperity but the period of their decay was come Ti e Thirty years War hastened their fall and scarcely one of them escaped destruction and run during that period

Nevertheless the Treaty of West phalia mentions them positively and asserts their position as immediate States that is to say States which depended immediately upon the Em perer but the neighbouring Sove reigns on the one hand and on the other the Emperor himself the exer cise of whose power since the Thirty years War was limited to the lesser vassals of the empire restricted their soverei mty within narrower and nar rower limits. In the eighteenth cen tury fifty one of them were still in existence they filled two benches at the Diet and hal an independent vote but in fact they no longer exercise lany influence upon the direction of general affairs

At home they were all heavily burdened with debts, partly because they continued to be charged for the Imperial taxes at a rate suited to their former splendour and partly because their own a liministration was extremely bad It is very remark. able that this bad alministration seemed to be the result of some secret disease which was common to them all whatever mught be the form of their constitution whether aristo cratic or democratic it equally gave rise to complaints which if not pre cisely similar were equally violent, if aristocratic the Government was said to have become a coterie com posel of a few families everything was done by favour and private in terest if democratic popular intrigue and venality appeared on every side In either case there were complaints of the want of honesty and disin terestedness on the part of the Govern ments The Laperor was contam ally forced to interpose in their affairs, and to try to restore order in them Their population decreased and dis tress prevailed in them They were no longer the abodes of German the arts left them and civilisation went to shine in the new towns created by the sovereigns and repre senting modern society Trade for sook them their ancient energy and patriotic vigour disappeared Ham burg almost alone still remainel a great centre of wealth and intelligence but this was owing to causes quite peculiar to herself

Novi (IN)-Page 19 line 11

DATE OF THE ABOLITION OF SERFDOM IN GERMANT

The following table will show that the alclition of serflom in most parts of Germany las taken place Serfdom was abol very recently ist ed-

1 In Baden in 1783

2 In Hohenzellern in 1804 3 In Schleswig and Holstein in 1804 4 In Nassau in 1808.

5 In Pruss a FrederickWilliam I had done away with serfdom in his own domains so early as 1717 The code of the Great Frederick as we have already seen was intended to abolish it throughout the kingdom, but in reality it only got rid of it in its hardest form the leibeigenschaft, and retained it in the mitigated shape of erbunterthanigheit It was not till 1809 that it disappeared alto gether

NOTES V-VI

6 In Bavaria serfdom disappeared ın 1809

7 A decree of Napoleon dated from Madrid in 1808, abolished it in the Grand duchy of Berg, and in several other small territories such as Erfurt Bureuth, &c

8 In the kingdom of Westphalia, its destruction dates from 1808 and 1809

9 In the principality of Lippe Detmold, from 1809 10 In Schomburg Lappe, from 1810

11 In Swedish Pomerania from 1810 also

12 In Hessen Darmstadt from 1809 and 1811 13 Würtemberg from 1817

14 In Mecklenburg from 1820 15 In Oldenburg from 1814 16 In Saxony for Lusatia from

1832 17 In Hohenzollern Sigmaringen, only from 1833

18 In Austria from 1811 So early as in 1782 Joseph II had de stroyed leibeigenschaft, but serfage in its mitigated form of erbunter thanigheit lasted till 1811

Note (\)-Page 19, line 17

A part of the countries which are now German such as Brandenlurg Prussia proper and Silesia were originally inhabited by a Slavonic race and were conquered and par tially occupied by Germans. In those countries serfdom had a far harsher aspect than in Germany itself and left far stronger traces at the end of the eighteenth century distinct from the rights of the State The name of the State is the only one u ed to designate royal power

On the other hand much is said about the general rights of man there general rights of man are based on the natural heety of each to pursue his advantage provided it be done without nighty of the rights of others. All actions not forbuiden by the natural law or by the positive laws of the State, are permitted. Every imbathant of the State may demand from it protection for his person and property and has the right to defend humself by force if the State does not come to his assist

After laying down these first great principles the legislator in stead of deducing from them as in the code of 1791 the doctrine of the sovereignty of the people and the organisation of a popular govern ment in a free state of society, turns shortly round and arrives at another result equally democratic but by no means liberal, he fools upon the sovereign as the sole representative of the State and invests him with all the rights that have been recog med as belonging to society this code the sovereign is no longer the representative of God he is the representative of society its agent and its servant to use Frederick's own words printed in his works, but he along represents it he alone wields us whole power The head of the State says the Introduction whose duty it is to bring forth the general good which is the sole object of society is authorised to govern an l direct all the actions of individuals towards that end

Unoug the clade latters of this all powerful agent of society we find the following to preserve peace and tuble security at home and to protect every one against violence Artorad it is for him to make laws and all the control of th

All associations that may exist in the State and all public establish ments are subject to his inspection and direction for the sake of general peace and security. In order that the head of the State may be enabled to fulfil these obligations, he must possess certain revenues and profit able rightly, accordingly he has the power of taxing private fortunes and persons their professions their trades their produce or their consumption. The orders given by the public functionaries who act in his name are to be obeved like his own in all matters within the limits of their functions.

Beneath this perfectly molern head we shall presently see a tho rough! Gotthe lody, Frederick only removed from it whatever stood in the way of the action of his own power and the result was a monster which looked like a transition from one order of creation to another. In this stringe production Frederick exhibited as much contempt for logic as cure for his own power and anxiety not to place needless difficulties in his own way by attacking that which was still strong enough to defend itself.

The inhabitants of the rural districts with the exception of a few districts and a few places, were in a state of here thart, servitude which was not confined to the forced fillour and services inherent to the possession of certain estates but which extended as we have seen to the person of the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses or the posses or the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses or the posses of the posses or the posses of the posses or the

Most of the privileges of the owners of the soul were confirmed afterth by the code it may even be sail that they were confirmed in opposition to the code among it states that where the local easterns and the new legs lation differed the former were to be followed. It formally deduces that they cover the committee of the cover of the committee of the cover of the cov

The code asserted it is true that serfage properly so called (leibergen sel aff) insumuch as it established personal servitule was abolished in but the level lury subjection which replace int (erb intertl' inighett) was still a kind of act it de as may be seen by reading the text

In the same code it e turnher remained carefully separated from the peasant between the birders and the poblity a sort of intermediate class was recognised, composed of high functionaries who were not noble ecclesiastics, professors of learned schools gymnasia and universities

Though apart from the rest of the bur hers these men were by no means confounded with the nobles. they remained in a position of in feriority towards them They could not in general purchase noble estates (rulterguter) or fill the highest places in the civil service Moreover, they were not hoffal ig, that is to say, they could not be presented at court except in very rare cases and never with their fumilies As in France. this inferiority was the more irl some, because every day this class became more enlightened and influential and the burgher functionaries of the State though they did not occupy the most brilliant posts already filled those in which the work was the hardest and the most important The urritation against the privileges of the nobility which was about to contribute so largely to the French Revolution prepared the way for the approbation with which it was at first received in Germany principal author of the code never theless was a burgher, but he doubt less followed the directions of his master

The ancient constitution of Europe was not sufficiently destroyed in this part of Germany to make Frederick believe that in spite of the contempt with which he regarded it the time was yet come for sweeping away its He mostly confined him remains self to depriving the nobles of the right of assembling and governing collectively and left each individual in possession of his privileges only restricting an I regulating their appli cation Thus it happened that this cole drawn up under the direction of a disciple of our philosophers and put in force after the French Revo lution had broken out is the most authentic and the most recent legis lative document that gives a legal basis to those very feudal inequalities which the Revolution was about to abolish throughout Europe

In it the nobility was declared to le the principal body in the State nobles were to be appointed by preference it says to all posts of honour which they might be com petent to fill They alone might possess noble estates create entails enjoy the privileges of sporting and of the administration of justice in licrent in noble estates as well as the rights of patronage over the Church, they alone might take the name of the estates they possessed The burghers who were authorised by express exemption to own noble estates could only emoy the rights and honours attached to their owner ship within the precise limits of this permission A burgher possessed of a noble estate could not bequeath it to an heir of his own class unless he was within the first degree of con sanguinity If there was no such heir, or any heir of noble birth the estate was to be sold by public

One of the most characteristic parts of Frederick's code is the penal law for political offences which is uppended to it The successor of the Great Frede rick Frederick Alliam II who in spite of the fendal and absolutist portion of the legislation of which I have given a sketch thought he per cerved a revolutionary tendency in his uncle's production and accord ingly delayed its publication until 17J1 was only reassured it is said by the excellent penal regulations by means of which this code corrected the bad principles which it contained Never indeed has anything been contrived even since that time more perfect in its lind not only were revolts and conspiracies to be pun ished with the greatest severity lut even disrespectful criticisms of the acts of the Government were likewise to be most severely repressed purchase and dissemination of dan gerous works was carefully pro hibited the printer, the publisher and the disseminator were made responsible for the sins of the author Ridottos masquerades and other amusements were declared to be public assemblages and must be authorise I by the police the same thing held good with respect to dinners in public places. The liberty of the press and of speech was com pletely subjected to an arbitrary s ir

Nort' (VIII)-Lare 22 line 8

TONITION OF THE NOBILITY AND CIVISION OF LANDS ALONG THE BANKS OF

I rom information gathere I on the spot, and from tersons who live ! un ler the ol I state of things I cather that in the I lectorate of Cologue for mstance there was a great mund er of villages without for la governed by the agents of the Prince, that an those places where the not this existe i its a liministrative powers were much restricted, that its position was rather brilliant than powerful (at least in his limity), that they enjoyed many honours and formed part of the council of the Prince but ever essel no real and immediate power over the rear le I have ascertaine ! from other sources that in the same electorate property was much divided an I that a great number of the jea sants were lan lowners, this was mainly attributable to the state of cubarrassment and almost distress in which so many of the nol le fimi hes had lon, lived an I which com telled them constantly to alienate small portions of their land which were bought by the peasants either for realy money or at a fixed rent I have real a census of the population of the Bishopric of Cologne at the beginning of the eighteenth century which gives the state of landed property at that tune and I fin I that even then one third of the soil belonged to the reasants this fiet aroso a combination of feel ings and ileas which I rought the population of this part of Germany far pearer to a state of revolution than that of other districts in which these peculiarities had not yet shown themselves

NOTE (IA.)-Page 22 line 27

NOW THE USUPY LAWS HAD ACCELERATED THE SUBDIVISION OF THE SOIL.

A law probabiliting usure at what ever rate of interest was still in force at the end of the eightenth century at the end of the eightenth century as the end of the eightenth century as the same from Targot that even so the same from Targot that even so the same from the same from

Independently of the effects which this legislation could not fail to pro duce upon commerce and up on the industrial hal its of the nation gene rulls, it il-kevise had a very finarked influence on the division and tenure and the control of the division and tenure of the division and tenure of the solid interest of the solid interest of the solid interest of the soli instead of borrowing when they wanted money to sell small portions of their estates for payments partly in capital and partly in perpetual and partly in perpetual and partly in the solid and of the solid industrial the solid and on the other to burden ing the small proprietors with a mill titude of Agerptical services.

Nore (A)-Page 25 line 9

EXAMPLE OF THE PASSIONS EXCITED BY THE TITHES TEN YEARS BEFORE THE REVOLUTION

In 1779 an obscure lawyer of Lucé revolution that the cures and other great titheholders sold to the farmers at an exorbit int price the straw they had received in tithe which was in complained in very bitter language had received in tithe which was in which already had a flavour of the dispensable to the latter for making

______ Note (MI)-Page 25 line 15

EXAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE CLERGY ALIEVATED THE PEOPLE BY THE EXEPCISE OF ITS PRIVILEGES

In 1780 the prior and the canons of the priory of Laval complained of an attempt to subject them to the pryment of the tariff duties on articles of consum; tion and on the materials needed for the repairs of their build mgs. They pleaded that as the tariff duties represented the taille and as they were exempt from the taille they therefore owed nothing The minister referred them to a decision at the election with the right of ap peal to the Cour des 41 les

NOTE (XII)-Page 25 line 23

FFUDAL RIGHTS POSSESSED BY PRIESTS -O'E EXAMPLE FROM AMOUGHT A THOUSAND

Abbt 1 of Clerbourg (1753) -This abbey possessed at this period the seignorial rent charges payable in money or in kind in almost every , parish round Cherbourg one single village owed it three hundred and six bushels of wheat It ownel the barony of Ste Geneviève the barony and the seignorial mill of Bas di Roule and the barony of Neuville au Plein situated at a distance of at least ten leagues It received more over the titles of twelve parishes in the peninsula of which several were very distant from it

Norr (AIII)-Page 27 line "1

IBRITATION AMONG THE FEASANTS CAUSED BY FEUDAL RIGHTS AND ESPE CIALLY BY THE FEUDAL RIGHTS OF THE PRIESTS

The following letter was written shortly before the Revol it on by a farmer to the Inten lant h mself It cannot be quoted as an a itl ority for itle truth of itle ficts which it alleges but it is a perfect in lication of the state of feeling among the class to which its writer belonged

Although we la e few nobles in the part of the country says le you must not a uppose that the lan l is any tle less burdene ! with rent

Note (XIV.)—Page 27, has 27

exerting considerable influence eyen. over that part of the legislation khich it does not govern thus foudalism although it belonged above all to political law had transformed the whole civil law as well and deeply mo lified the state of property and of persons in all the relations of private life It had affected the law of in heritance by the inequality of parti tion a principle which had even reached down to the middle classes in certain provinces for instance Normandy 1 Its influence had ex tended over all real property for no landed estates were entirely excluded from its action or of which the owners did not in some way feel its effects It affected not only the pro

Livery institution that has long been dominant affice estallishing the communes it, reacted on minus itself firmly in its bridge ophore. Actions by the dathes which it levied increases beyond it and emiss by the contracts of million in the contract of the contract of million in the contract of the contr comes by the mequality of public Terests, generally in every man s bhaness; on landowners by dues Tent charges and the corvee, on the *enant in a thousand different ways amongst others ly the bar alites (the right of the seigneur to compel his vassals to grand their corn at his mill tc) seignorial monopolies per petual rent charges fines &c , on tradesmen by the market dues, on merchants by the transport dues &c By putting the final stroke to the feudal system the Revolution made itself seen and felt so to speak at all the most sensitive points of private interest

Note (NV)-Page 35 line 8

PUBLIC CHARITY DISTRIBUTED BY THE STATE -FAVOURITISM

In 1748 the King granted 20 000 lbs of rice (it was a year of great want and scarcity like so many in the eighteenth century) The Arch ought therefore to be distributed by him alone and in his own diocese The Intendant declared that the suc cour was granted to the whole gene ralite and ought therefore to be dis tributed by him to all the lifferent parishes After a protracted strift gle the King by may of conciliating both do ible I the quantity of rice in ten led for the generalitie so that the Arel b shop an I the Toten lant might each d'stribute half Toth were arreel that the 1 Str birt on should be male by the cures There was no quest on of entrusting it to the seign eurs or to the syndies We see from the correspondence between the In tendant and the Comptroller General that in the opinion of the former the Archbishop wanted to give the rice bishop of Tours asserted that this entirely to his own proteges and relief was obtained by him and especially to cause the greater part of it to be distribute I in tl'e parishes be longing to the Duchess of Roche chouart On the other hand we fin I among these papers letters from great noblemen asking relief for their own parishes in particular and letters from the Comptroller General recommending the parishes belong ing to particular persons

Legal charity gives scope for ab ises whatever be the system pur sucd but it is perfectly impracticable wi en evere se i from a distance an i without sublicity by the Central Government

No. (XVI)-Page 85, Ime 8

FRAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THIS LIGHT CHAILTH WAS ADMINISTEPED

We find in the report made to the prominial assembly of Uljer Cui and in 1780 'Out of the sim of 85 000 hives the amount of the funds granted by his Majorsty to this generalite from 1773, when the tracaux de charite were first established, until 1770 inclusively, the elective dutrict of Montaulian, which is the chef hen and residence of the Interlant, has received for its own share above 210000 livres, the greater 1 at of which sum was actually paid to the communaute of Montaghan.

Norr (NII)-Page 35 line 12

POWERS OF THE INTENDENT FOR THE REGULATION OF TRADES AND

The archives of the Intendancies are full of documents relating to this regulation of trales and manufactures

Not only was industry subjected to the restrictions placed upon it by the corps d et it, maitrises, &c but it was al andoned to all the entrices of the Government usually represented by the kings council, as far as general regulations went and ly the intendants in their special applica We find the latter constantly interfering as to the length of which the pieces of cloth are to be woven the pattern to be chosen the method to be followed and the defects to be avoided in the manufacture. They had under their orders in lei endently of the sub delegates local inspectors of manufactures In this respect cen tralisation was pushed even further than at the present time it was more expricious and more arbitrary raised up swarms of public function aries and created all manner of habits of submission and dependence

It must be remembered that these habts were engrafted above all upon the manufacturing and cominercial middle classes whose triumph was at hand far more than upon those which were doomed to defeat Accordingly the Revolution instead of destroying these habits could not fail to make them spread and predominate

All the preceding remarks have been suggested by the perusal of a voluminous correspondence and other documents entitled 'Manu factures and Labrics Drapery, Dry goods' which are to be found among the remaining papers belonging to the archives of the Intendancy of the Islo of France They likewise con tain frequent and detailed reports from the inspectors to the Intendant of the visits they have made to the various manufactures in order to as certain whether the regulations lail down for the methods of fibrication are observed. There are moreover sun lry orders in council given by the alvice of the Intendant, pro lubiting or permitting the manu facture either in certain I laces of certain stuffs or according to cer tain methods

Tho predominant idea in the remarks of these inspectors who treat the nanufacturers with great disdain is that it is the duty and the right of the State to compel them to do their very best not only for sake of the public interest but for their own Accordingly they thought the compelent of their own Accordingly they thought the less than the sake of the public interest but for their own Accordingly they could be a supplied to the sake of the public interest but only the less methods and to enter carefully into every detail of their art accompanying this kind interest with countless prohibitions and enor mous fines

NOTE (XVIII)—Page 36 last line SPIRIT OF THE GOVERNMENT OF LOUIS XL

No document better enables us to estimate the true spirit of the government of Lous XI than the nume rous constitutions granted by him to the towns. I have had occasion to study very carefully those which he conferred on most of the towns of Anjon of Mane and of Tourand

All these constitutions are formed on the same model and the same on the same model and the same designs are manufest in them all. The figure of Louis VI which they retail to us is in the different from the one which we are fumiliar with 'We are accustomed to consider him as the enemy of the nobility but at the same time as the sincere though somewhat stern friend of the people there however he shows the same hatred towards the political rights of the people and of the nobility He makes use of the middle classes to pull down those above them and to keep down those below he is equally anti aristocratic and antı demo cratics he is essentially the citizen king He heaps privileges upon the principal persons of the towns, whose importance he desires to increase he profusely confers nobility on them thus lowering its value and at the same time he destroys the whole popular and democratic character of the administration of the towns and restricts the government of them to a small number of families attached to his reforms, and bound to his authority by immense advantages franchise des droits the cloison double and triple the old and new octroi and accessore on all articles of consumption even from the dong ratur. from which says the 1 realist they chose to evening themselves on their own private authority, they receive moreover allowances for wax lights and some of them salaries and anythments.

We see by these details that it was a very pleasant thing to be per pet al (chevius of Angers in those days Always and everywhere we find the system which makes the exemption from taxation full on the richest classes In a subsequent part of the same report we real 'These places are sought by the richest in habitants who aspire to them in order to obtain a considerable reduc tion of capitation the surchar_e of which falls on the others There are at present several municipal others whose fixed capitation is 30 livres whereas they ought to be taxed 250 or 300 livres there is one especially among them who considering his fortune might pay at least hvres of capitation tax * We find in another part of the same report that amongst the richest inhabitants there are upwards of forty officers or wr lows of officers (men holding office) whose places confer on them the privilege of not contributing to the heavy capitation leviel on the town the burden of this capitation accordingly falls on a vast number of poor artisans wlo think themselves overtaxel and constantly appeal against the excessive charges upon them though almost al vays un justly masmuch as there is no in equality in the distribution of the amount which remains to be paid by the town

The General Assembly consisted of seventy six persons —

The Mayor

Two deput es from the Chapter

One Syn l c of the clerks
Two deputies from the Pré

One depity from the University
One Lieutenant general of Police Four Echevins

Twelve Conseillers écl evins

One Procurent du Roi au Pré

One Procureur de Ville

Two dejuties from the Laux et Porcts, Two from the I lection (elective district 9).

Two from the Grenier & sel

Two from the Traites, Two from the Mint,

Two from the boly of Avocats

Two from the Juges Consuls,

Two from the body of Merchants and lastly.

Two sent by each of the sixteen

These last were supposed to re present the people properly so called especially the indistrial corporations. We see that care hall been taken to keep them in a constant minority

When the places in the town cor poration fell vacant the general as sembly selected three persons to fill

each vacancy

Movt of the offices belonging to the Hôtel de Ville were not exclis svely given to members of corporations as was the case in several min incipal constitutions that is to say the electors were not oblige I to choose from among them their magnitudes advocates &c This was lightly d's approve] by the members of the

Presidial According to this Presidial, which appears to have I een filled with the most violent jealousy against the cor poration of the town and which I strongly suspect objected to nothing so much in the municipal constitu tion as that it did not enjoy as many privileges in it as it desired the General Assembly which is too nu merous and consists in part of per sons of very I tile intell gence, ought only to be consulted in cases of sale of the communal domains loans establishment of octrois and elections of municipal off cers All other busi ness matters might be discusse I in a smaller assembly composed or ly of the ratables Ti s assembly shoul ! consist only of the Lieutenant General of the Senéchaussée the Procureur du Ros and twelve other notables chosen from amongst the six bolies of clergy magistracy nobility uni versity, trade, and bourgeois, and others not belonging to the above named bodies. The choice of the notables should at first be confined to the General Assembly, and subsequently to the Assembly of Notables, or to the body from which each notable is to be selected? All these functionaries of the State. who thus entered in virtue of their office or as notables into the munici pal corporations of the ancien regime. frequently resembled those of the pre sent day as to the name of the office which they held, and sometimes even as to the nature of that office, but they differed from them completely as to the position which they held. which must be carefully borne in mind, unless we wish to arrive at false conclusions. Almost all these functionaries were notables of the town previous to being invested with public functions, or they had striven to obtain 1 ublic functions in order to become notables, they had no thought of leaving their own town and no hope of any higher promotion which alone is sufficient to distinguish them com pletely from anything with which we are acquainte I at the present day

In 1601 a decision of the parliament determined the political rights created by the Royal Charter From that time forward nothing appears but the couseil du Roy

We gather from the same report that, not only for the office of mayor. but for all other offices belonging to the corporation of the town the Gene ral Assembly proposed three candi dates, from amongst whom the King selects one in virtue of a decree of the council of 22nd June, 1708 appears moreover, that in virtue of decisions of the council of 1733 and 1741 the merchants had the right of claiming one place of chevin or consciller (the perpetual échevins) Lastly, we find that at that period the cornoration of the town was en trusted with the distribution of the sums levied for the capitation the ustensile, the barracks the support of the poor, the soldiery, coast guard, and foundlings

There follows a long enumeration of the labours to be undergone by the numerical officers which fully justified in their opinion, the privileges and the perpetual tenure of office which they were evidently greatly that all this is all ressed to the Comp troller General husself in order to dispose him favourably towar's the privileges of those who make the statement so involvente had the habit become of looking upon the companies charged with the collection of the taxes as an enemy who might be attacked on overy sade with out blame or opposition. This habit grew stronger and more universal every day until all treation came to be looked upon as an unfair and hate ful tyranny, not as the agent of all men but as the common enemy

The union of all the offices the report goes on to say, ' was effecte l for the first time by an order in coun cil of the 4th September 1694 for a sum of 22 000 livres that is to say that the offices were redeemed in that year for the above named sum By an order of 26th April 1723 the municipal offices created by the edict of 24th May 1722 were united to the corporation of the town or in other worls the town was authorised to purchase them By another order of 24th Way 1723 the town was per mitted to borrow 120 000 livres for the purchase of the said offices Another order of 26th July 1728 allowed it to borrow 50 000 livres for the purchase of the office of greffier secretary of the Hotel de Ville town says the report has paid these moneys in order to maintain the free dom of its elections and to secure to the officers elected-some for two years and others for I fe-the various prerogatives belong ng to their offices A part of the municipal offices having been re established by the edict of November 1733 an order in co incil intervened dated 11th January 1751 at the req est of the mayor and eche ving fixing the rate of redemption at 170 000 livres for the payment of which a prorogation of the octrois was granted for fifteen years

This is a good specimen of the administration of the monarchy as far as the towns were concerned. They were force I to contract debts and then authorise I to impose extraord many an I temporary taxes in or ler to pay them. Moreover I find that these temporary taxes were frequently the state of the many and temporary taxes were frequently than the contract of the c

The report continues thus The municipal officers were only deprived of the important judicial powers with which Louis NI had mixed them ly the satisfications. Until 1600 they took cognisance of all disputes between mixed in the continue of the continue o should be the street that the deputes of the action has the deputes of the action has been also were mentioned above and who appeared in the General As sembly were chosen by the companies corporations or communautes and that they were strictly the envoys of the small boiles by which they were deputed. They were bound by each instructions on every point of business Lastly this report proves that at Angers as everywhere else every kind of expenditure was to be autho rised by the Intendant and the Coun cil and it must be admitted that when the admin stration of a town is given over completely into the hands of a certain number of men to whom instead of fixed salaries are conceded privileges which place them per sonally beyond the reach of the con sequences which their administration may produce upon the private for tunes of their fellow citizens this administrative superintendence may appear necessary. The who do of the report which is very all drawn up betrays extra ordinary dread on the part of the official men of any change in the existing order of things. All manner of arguments good and bad are brought forward by them in favour of maintaining the state in quo or maintaining the state is quo

Report of it e Sub delegate —The Intendant having receive i these two reports of oppos to tendency des res to have the opinion of his Sub lelegate who gives it as follows —

The report of the municipal councillors says he does not de serve a moment a attention it is merely intended to defent it e privile, es of those oflicers. That of the fr si laid may be consilted with a livantage but there is no reason for granting all the j rerogatics claimed by those mag strates.

According to the Sul delegate, the constitution of the H itel de Ville has ling stood m need of reform Besides the mummitus already mentioned. which were enjoyed is the municipal officers of Angers, I e inf ring us that the Mayor, during his tenure of office, had a dwelling which was worth at least 600 france rent a ralary of 50 france and 100 france for frais de poste besides the jetons. The pro cureur syndic was also lodge I, and the greff er as well In order to tro cure their own exemption from the droits danles and the octron the municipal officers hal fixed an as sumed standard of consumition for each of them I'ach of them had the right of importing into the town free of duty, so many barrels of wine yearly, and the same with all other provisions.

The Sub delegate does not prop one of deprive the numery al councilors of their immunities from taxtition, but he desires that their cryintion, instead of being fixed and very made quate, should be taxed every one besond also be subject like every one else, to the don gratual, which they and dispensed themselves from paying on what precedent no one can tall.

The municipal officers the report says further are charged with the duty of drawing up the roles de caps tation for all the inhal itants-a duty which they perform in a negligent and arbitrary manner, accordingly a vast number of complaints and me monals are sent in to the Intendant every year It is much to be desired that henceforth the division should be made in the interest of each com pany or communauté by its own members according to stated and general rules, the municipal officers would have to make out only the rôles de capitation for the burghers and others who belong to no corpora tion such as some of the artisans and the servants of all privileged persons

The report of the Sub delegate confirms what has already been said of the municipal officers—that the municipal offices had been redeemed by the town in 1735 for the sum of 170 000 hyres

Letter of the Intendant to the Comptroller General - Supported by all these documents the Intendant writes to the Minister 'It is important, for the sake of the inhalit ants an l of the pullic good, to reduce the corporation of the town the memi ers of which are too numerous and extremely lurdensome to the public, on account of the privileges they entoy 'I am struck,' continues the Intendant, with the ener mous sums which have been paid at all periods for the redem tion of the mumerpal offices at Angera. amount of these sums, if employed on useful purposes, would have been profitable to the town, which, on the contrary, has gained nothing but an increased lurden in the authority and trivileges enjoyed by these officers'

The interior abuses of this ad ministration deserve the whole atten tion of the council 'says the Intendant further 'Independently of the jetons and the wax lights which consume an annual sum of 2127 livres (the amount fixed for expenses of this kind by the normal budget, which from time to tune was prescribed for the towns by the King), the public moneys are squan lered and misapplied at the will of these officers to clan lestine purposes, and the procureur du Ros who has been in possession of his lace for thurty or forty years, has made himself so completely master of the administration with the secret springsof which he alone is acquainted, that the inhabitants have at all times found it impossible to obtain the smallest information as to the em ployment of the communal revenues The result of all this is that the Intendant requests the Minister to reduce the corporation of the town to a mayor as pointed for four years a procureur du Roi appointed for eight and a greffier and receveur appointed for life

Altogether the constitution which he proposes for this corporation is exactly the same as that which he elsewhere suggested for towns In his opinion it would be desirable—

Ist To maintain the General Assembly but only as an electoral body for the election of municipal officers

2nd To create an extraordinary

Conseil de Notables, which should perform all the functions which the dict of 1764 had apparently entrusted to the General Assembly, the said council to consist of twelve members, whose tenure of office should be for six years and who should be detected, not by the General Assembly but by the twelve corporations considered as motable (each corporation electing its own). He enumerates the corporation tables as follows:

otables as follow The Présidial

The University

The Election

The Officers of Woods and Forests The Grenier 4 sel

The Grenier & sel

The Mint

The Avocats and Procureurs

The Juges Consuls

The Notaires

The Tradesme The Burghers

It appears that nearly all these notables were public functionaries, and nearly all the public functionaries, and nearly all the public functionaries were notables, hence we may conclude as from a thousand other passages in these documents that the middle classes were as greedy of place and as Intel melined to seek place and as Intel melined to seek place and as Intel melined for the contract of the contract of able as to get it for them gratis We see that according to the pro ject we have described the whole municipal power was to rest with the extraordinary council which would completely restrict the a liministration to a very small mid lie class cotorie while the only assembly in which the people still made their appearance at all was to have no privilege beyond that of electing the municipal officers without any right to advise or control It must also be observed that the Intendent was more in favour of restriction an linore of posed to popu lar influence than the him, whose edict seemed inten led to place most of the power in the hands of the General Assembly and that the Intendant again is fir more liberal and democratic than the midlle classes, judging at least by the report. I have quoted in the text by which it appears that the notables of another town were desirous of excluding the people even from the election of municipal officers a right which the King and the Intendant had left to them.

My readers will have observed that the Intendant uses the words burghers and tradesmen to designate two destinct eategories of notables It will not be amiss to give an exact definition of these words in order to show into how many small factions the middle classes were durinded and by how many petty vanities they were agitated.

The word burgher had a general and a restricted sense. it was used to designate those belonging to the middle class and also to specify a certain number of persons included within that class The burghers are those whose birth and fortune enable them to live decently, without the exercise of any gainful pursuit says one of the reports produced on occa sion of the inquiry in 1764 by the rest of the report that the word burgher was not to be used to designate those who belonged either to the com panies or the industrial corporations but it is more difficult to define exactly to whom it should be applied the report goes on to say, amongst those who arrogate to themselves the title of burgher, there are many persons who have no other claim to it but their idleness, who have no fortune, and lead an olscure and uncultivated life The burghers ought preperly to be distinguished by fortune birth talent morality andahan Isomo way of hving the artisans who com pose the communautes have never been a limitted to the rank of notables After the burghe s the mercantile men formed a second class which belong to no company or corporation, but the limits of this s nall class were hard to define Arc says the report the petty tra leamen of low birth to be confoun led with the great wlole sale dealers? In or ler to resolve these deficulties the report proposes to have a list of the not il le trade smen drawn up 13 the del came and given to il eir head or syn lie in order that he may summon to if delil crations

5 Processerved of all these operations by which it upwers that at the inquiry a certain number of landonners of Irry appeared before the commissioner sent by the Intendant, which persons appleared to be nobles burghers and peasants of the place, and merried their declarations for or against the claim set up by the cure

7 Fresh ordonnance of the Intendant to the effect that the statements drawn up by the architect whom he had sent shall be communicated to the landowners and inhabitants of the parish at a fresh general meeting to be convoked by the syndic

8 Fresh Parochial Assemily in consequence of this ordennance at which the inhabitants declare that they persist in their declarations

Ordonnance of the Intendant who directs 1st That the adjudication of the worl seet forth in the architect s statement shall be proceeded with before his Sub delegate at Corbeil in the dwelling of the latter and that the said adjudication shall be made in the presence of the cure the syndic and the chief inhabitants of the parish 2nd That masmuch as delay would be dangerous the whole sum shall be raised by a rate on all the inhabitants leaving those who ersist in thinking that the steeple forms part of the choir and ought therefore to be repaired by the large titheowners to as peal to the ordinary courts of justice

10 Summons issued to all the parties concerned to appear at the house of the Sub delegate at Corbeil where the proclamations and adjudi

cation are to be made

11 Memorial from the curé and several of the inhabitants requesting that the expenses of the a humistrative proceeding should not be charged as was usually the case to the adjusticator seeing that the said expenses were very leavy and would prevent any one from undertaking the oftee of adjul heat.

12 Or lonnance of the Inten lant to the effect that the expenses meurred in the matter of the a lyu heation shall be fixelly the Sub delegate and that their amount shall form a portion of the sail adjudication and rate

13 I owers given by certain notal le

inliabitants to the Sieur X to be present at the said adjudication and to assent to it, according to the statement of the architect

14 Certificate of the syndic to the effect that the usual notices and advertisements have been published

15 Proces verbal of the adjudication—

Estimate of repairs 487
Expenses of adjudication 237

487 0 0 287 18 6

724 18 6 16 Lastly, an order in council (23rd July, 1748) authorising the imposition of a rate to raise the above sum

We see that in this procedure the convocation of the Parochial Assem bly was alluded to several times

The following process verbal of the meeting of one of these assemblies will show the reader how business was conducted on such occasions—

Acte notarie—This day after the parochal mass at the usual and accustomed place when the lell had been rung there appeare 1 at the Assembly held before the under agend \(\) notary at Corbeil and the witnesses hereafter numed the Seuri Michand vine dresser synthe of the and parish, who presented the order and the seuring the seu

'Immediately an inhabitant of the said parish appeared who stated that the steet le was above the chan cel and that consequently the repairs belonged to the cure there also all peared [here follow the names of some other persons who on the other hand were willing to admit the claim of the curé appeared fifteen peasants labourers masons and vine dressers who do clared their adhesion to what the preceding persons had sail There likewise appeared the Sieur Raim bau I vine grower who said that he is realy to agree to whatever Mon seigneur the Intendant may decile There also appeared the Sienr \doctor of the Sorbonne the cur! who persists in the declarations and purposes of the memorial wlo appeare I deman le I that all the above should be taken down in the Act. Done at the sail place of Ivra, in frost of the clurchs and of the sail pansh in the pre-ence of the unler signed, and the drawing up of the present report occup cl fr m 11 oclock in the morning until 2 oclock.

We see that this Paroch al As sembly was a mere administrative inquiry with the forms and the cost of judicial inquiries that it never ended in a vote and consequently in the manife tation of the will of the parish, that it contained only individ all opinions and had no influence on the determination of the Govern Inteed we learn from a number of other documents that the Larochial Assemblies were intended to a sist the decision of the Inten dant, and not to hinder it even where nothing but the interests of the parish were concerned.

We also find in the same docu ments that this affair gave rise to three inquiries one before the notary

a second before the architect and lastly a third before two notaries in order to ascertain whether the larish ners persisted in their previous declarations

no is occiarations. The rate of 524 ht 10s imposed by the decree of the 13th July 1749 fit upon all the landowners privileg 1 or otherwise as was almost always the cas with respect to expenses of this kind, 1 if the principle on which the shares were alprotioned to the various persons was different The trill July awer taked in proportion to their trille and the province of the trill July and the service of the same which gave a great datantage to the latter over the former.

Lattle we full that on this same occasion the division of the sum of (2) hi 10.8, was made by two col lectors, who were inhibitants of it or ullage, these were not elected nor did they fill the post by turns, as was commonly the case but they were chosen and appointed officially by the Sub delegate of the Intendant

Note (XXII)-Page 46 line 21

The pretest taken by Louis VI.

The sterry the muneupal liberities of the forms was the ball a liministry of the forms was the ball a liministry of the sterry which they have lent to the sums which they have lent to the Government and partly owing to the expenses and decorations which the municipal officers who have the di-josal of other peoples money and have no account to ren der to the inhabitants or in tructions to receive from them multiply with a view of distinguishing and some times of enriching themselves

NOTE (XXIII)—Page 46 line 32.

THE STATE WAS THE GUARDIAN OF THE CONVENTS AS WELL AS OF THE COMMUNES.—EXAMPLE OF THIS GUARDIANSHIP

The Comptroller General, on au thorsing the Intendant to pay 15 000 livres to the convent of Carmelites to which indemnites were owing desires the Intendant to assure him self that this money which represents a cap tal is advantageously re invested. Analogous facts were constantly recurring

Note (XXIV)-Page 50 line 22

SHOWING THAT THE ADMINISTRATIVE CENTRALISATION OF THE OLD MONARCHY
COULD BE REST JUDGED OF IN CANADA

The physicgnomy of the metropolitan government can be most fully appreciated in the colonies, because at that distance all its cha racteristic features are exagerated and and become more usible. When we wish to judge of the spirit of the Administration of Louis NIV and its vices it is to Canada we must look. There we shall see the deformity of the object of our investigation as through a microscope

In Canada a host of obstacles which anterior circumstances or the ancient state of society opposed either in secret or openly to the spirit of the Government, did not The nobility was scarcely seen there or at all events it had no root in the soil the Church had lost its dominant position traditions were lost or obscured, judicial authority was no longer rooted in ancient institutions and There was nothing to manners hinder the central power from fol-lowing its natural bent and from fashioning all the laws according to its own spirit In Canada accord ingly we find not a trace of any municipal or provincial institutions no authorised collective force in hyidual initiative allowed Intendant occupied a position infi nitely more preponderant than that of his fellows in Prance the Ad ministration interfered in more matters than in the metropolis and chose to direct everything from Paris spite of the eighteen hundred leagues by which they were divided It adopted none of the great principles by which a colony is rendered popu lous and prosperous but on the other hand it had recourse to all kinds of trifling artificial processes and petty tyrannical regulations in order to increase and extent the population compulsory cultivation all lawsuits arising out of the grants of land with lrawn from the tribunals and referre I to the sole decision of the Ad numstrat on obligati n to pursue particular methods of cultivation to settle in certain places rather than others &c All these regulations were in force under Louis XIV and the edicts are countersigned by Col One might imagine oneself in the very thick of modern centralisa tion and in Algeria Indeed Canada presents an exact counterpart of all we have seen in Algeria In both we find ourselves face to face with an administration almost as numerous as the population preponderant in terfering, regulating restricting sisting upon foreseeing everything controlling everything and under standing the interests of those under its control better than they do them selves, in short in a constant state of barren activity In the United States on the other hand the decentralisation of the English is exaggerated, the townships have become nearly inde pendent municipalities small demo cratic republics The republican element which forms the basis of the English constitution and man ners shows itself in the United States without disguise or hindrance, and becomes still further developed The Government properly so called, does but little in Lightland and pri vate persons do a great deal, in America the Government 'really takes no part in affairs and indi viduals unite to do everything absence of any higher class rendered the inhabitants of Canada more submissive to the Government tlan even those of Irance at the same periol makes the population of the Luglish provinces more and more in lepen lent of authority

Both colonies resulted in the formation of a completely deino cratic state of society, but no one so long at least as Gand as still be longed to Trance equality was untied with alsolutism in the other it was combined with ill erty. As far two colonial systems were concerned to the control of the control o

NOTE (XXV)-Page 5º line 10

OVE EXAMPLE, AMONG MANY OF THE GENERAL PEQUIATIONS CONTINUALLY MADE BY THE COUNCIL OF STATE WHICH HAD THE FORCE OF LAWS THEOUGHOUT FRANCE AND CPEATED SPECIAL OFFENCES OF WHICH THE ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNALS WERE THE SOLE JUDGES

I take the first which comes to hand an order in council of the 29th April 1779 which directs that throughout the kingdom the breeders and sellers of sheep shall mark their flocks in a particular manner under a penalty of 300 livres His Majesty it declares, enjoins upon the Inten dants the duty of enforcing the execution of the present order which infers that the Intendant is to pronounce the penalty on its infraction Another example an order in coun cil 21st December, 1778 prohibiting the carriers and drivers to warehouse the goods entrusted to them under a penalty of 300 hyres. His Maiesty enjoins upon the Lieutenant General of Police and the Intendants to en force this order

Note (XXVI)-Page 60 line 39

EURAL POLICE.

The provincial assembly of Upper Guienne urgently demanded the creation of fresh brigades of the marechaus ée just as now a days the general council of Aveyron or Lot doubtle s requests the formation of fresh brigades of gendarmene The same idea always prevails the gendarmene is the symbol of order and order can only be sent by Govern ment through the gen larme report continues Complaints are male every day that there is no Police in the rural districts thow should there be? the nobles took no part in affairs the burghers were all in the towns and the town hips, represented by a vulcar peasant hall no power) and it must be admitted that with the exception of a few can tons in which just and benevolent seigneurs make use of the influence which their pontion gives them over their vassals in order to prevent those acts of violence to which the country people are naturally inclined by the coarceness of their manners and the asperity of their character there no where exists any means of restraining these ignorant rude and violent men

Such were the terms in which the nobles of the Provincial As embly allowed themselves to be spoken of and in which the members of the Tiers Litat who male up half the assembly spoke of the people in public documents!

NOTE (XXVII)-Page 61 line 24

Lacences for the sale of tobacco were as much sought fr under the old monarchy as they are no . The greatest people begged f r them f r their creatures. I find that some were given on the recommen lation of great la bes, an I one at the request of some arcl bish ps.

Note (XXVIII)-Page 62, line 22

The extinction of all local public life surprised all power of belief. One of the roads from Maine into Normandy was impracticable. Who do our renders imagine requested to have trepruced? the glarealite of Tourane, which it traversed? the provinces of Normandy or Maine, so deeply interested in the cattle trade which followed this road? or even some particular canton especially inconvenenced by its impassable condition? The generating the provinces, and the cantons had no voccion thematter. The dealers who travelled on this road and stuck fast in the ruits were obliged to call the attention of the Central Government tots state, and to write to Paris to the Comp troller General for assistance.

Note (XXIX)-Page 69, line 8

MORE OF LESS IMPORTANCE OF THE SEIGNORIAL DUES OF RENT CHARGES, ACCORDING TO THE PROVINCE

Turgotanys in his works 'I ought to point out the fact that these dues noe far more important in most of the rich provinces such as Normandly, Picardly, and the environs of Paris in the last named the chief wealth consists in the actual produce of the land, which is held in large farms, from which the owners derive heavy rents. The payments in respect of the lords sights in the case even of the largest estates, form but an in considerable part of the income arising from these properties, and such payments are little more than

In the poorer provinces where cultivation is manyged on different perceipes, the lords and nobles have proceed any month of the province and the lords in according to the produce, and the lords in according to the produce and the lords in according to the produce and the lords in according to the produce and the lords in the lor

Note (XXX)-Page 74, line 84

INFLUENCE OF SELF GOVERNMENT UNFAVOURABLE TO CASTE

The unimportant labours of the agricultural societies of the eighteenth century show the adverse influence which the common discussion of general interests exercised on caste Though the meetings of these socie ties date from thirty years before the Revolution when the ancien reaime was still in full force and though they dealt with theories only -1 , the very fact of their discussions turning on questions in which the different classes of society felt themselves in terested, and therefore took common part in- we may at once perceive how they brought men together and how by means of them-hunted as they were to conversations on agricul ture—ideas of reasonable reform spread alike among the privileged and un rivileged classes

I am convinced that no Govern ment could have kept up the alsurd and mad me junity which crusted in Trance at the moment of the Revolution, but one which like the Govern ment of the old monarchy, amed at finding all us strength in its own ranks continually recruited by remarkable men. The slightest contact with edge government would have materially modified such inequality, and soon transformed or destroyed it.

NOTE (XXI)-Page 75, line 8

Provincial liberties may exist for a while without national liberty, when they are ancient entwined with habits manners and early recollections and while despots in on the contrary, is recent But it is against reason to suppose that local liberties may be created at will or even long maintained when general liberty is crushed

Note (\\\II)-Page 75, line 19

Turgot in a report to the King, sums up in the following terms, which appear to me singularly exact, the real proleges of the noble class in regard to taxation—

'1 Persons of the privileged class have a claim to exemption from all taxation in money to the extent of a four lough farm equivalent in the neighbourhool of Paris to an assessment of 2 000 fruings

2 The same persons are entirely exempt from twatten in respect of woods meadows unequits, fish nods and for neclosed fands appear tenant to their easiles, whitever their extent. In some cuntons the principal culture is of meadows or vine yards in these the noble proprietor escapes from all taxation whatever, the whole weight of which falls on the tax paying class, another immerso a hantage for the privilegical

NOTL (XXXIII)—Page 76 line 7

INDIRECT PRIVILEGES IN RESPLCT OF TAXATION DIFFERENCE IN ASSESSMENT EVEN WHEN THE TAX IS GENERAL

Turgot has given a description of this allo, which judging by the documents I have reason to believe exact

The inducet advantages of the privileged classes in regard to the poll tax are very great. The poll tax is in its very neture an arbitrary impost, it cannot be distributed amon, the community otherwise than at random. It has been found most convenient to assess it on the tax collector s bool s which are really prepared. It is true that a separation has been made out for those whose cames do not appear a linear separation of the property of th

NOTE (NAIV)-Pige 70 line 14

ANOTHER INSTANCE OF INEQUALITY OF ASSESSMENT IN THE CASE OF A GENERAL TAX

It is well known that local rates were general which sums say the orders in council authorising the lesy of such rate shall be levic lon all hable exempt or non ex mpt privileged or non privileged without nothing on his little garden. The rich man pays for his horses, curriages and servants—he pays even for a licence to shoot his own partridges; the poor man is free from all these burdens. Nav, more, in England we have a tax paid by the rich to help the poor! So that, I say, if traces are still to be paid, they should be paid differently. The Linglish plan is far the better one.

'As my bad French,' adds Young, 'was much on a par with their patois, they understood me perfectly.'

NOTE (XXXVIII)-Page 86, line 24

The church at \(\)_, in the electoral distinct of Chollet was going to ruin the state of the provided by the order of 1884 (16th December), vz., by a rate levied on all the ministrative. When the collectors came to levy this rate, the Marquis de \(\)_, eagment of the pursh, refused to pay his proportion of the rate, as he meant to take as he meant to take on himself the entire repair of the channel, the desired of the great thinks, he is bound they that as lord of the manor and hely that as lord of the manor and hely that as lord of the manor and hely that as lord of the great thinks, he is bound to repar the channel, and cannot, on rage oo, me 24

the plev of this obligation, claim to escape his proportion of the common rate. This produces an order of the Intendant declaring the Marquis a libibity, and authorising the collector's proceedings. Among the priparation on the subject are more than ten letters from the Marquis, one more urgent than the other, beguing hard that the rest of the parsh may pay instead of himself, and, to obtain a praver, stooping to address the Intendant as "Monseigneur," and even "te auphlier" it supplier.

Note (XXXIX.)-Page 87, line 35

AN INSTANCE OF THE WAY IN WHICH THE GOTERNMENT OF THE OLD MONARCHY BE-PECTED VESTED RIGHTS, FORMAL CONTRACTS, AND THE FRANCHISES OF TOWNS OR CORPORATIONS.

A xyal declaration suspending in time of war repayment of all loans contracted by towns, villages collects, communities, hospitals charitable houses trade corporations, and others, repayable out of town dues by us concelled, though the instrument securing the said loans stipulates for the payment of micrest in the case of non payment at the stipulates.

Thus not only is the obligation to repayment at the stipulated terms suspended but the security itself is impaired Such proceedings, which abounded under the old monarchy, would have leen impracticable under a Government acting under the check of publicity or representative assembles Compare the above with the respect always shown for such rights in England and even in America. The contempt of right in this instance is as flagrant as that of local franchises

NOTE (NL)-Page 89 line 21

The case cited in the text is fir findal lunders which weighed down the master reached even to them sonly the privileged class that the selves. The following is the lan guage of an agricultural society, exclusively composed of this class, thirty years before the Revolution—

I Le not corporate us for trading purposes, but bed es like our livery companes.

⁴Perpetual rent charges whether due to the State or to the lord if at all consulerable an amount, become so burdensome to the tenant that they cause first his rum, and then that of the land hable to them, the tenant is forced to neglect it, being neither able to borrow on the security of an estate already too heavily burdened, nor to find purchasers if he wish to sell. If then payments were commutable, the tenant would reddly be able to raise the means of communique multiple them by borrowing, or to find purchasers at a price that would cover the value both of the land and the payments with which it might be charged A man always feels pleasure in keeping up and improving a property of which he believes hunself to be in perceable possession would be rendering a great service to agriculture to discover means of com mutation for this class of payments Many lords of manors, convinced of this, would readily give their aid to such arrangements It would therefore, be very interesting to discover and point out practicable means for thus ridding land from permanent burdens '

Note (XLI)-Page 90 line 38

All public functionaries, even the agents of farmers of the revenue were pead by exemptions from taxes—a privilege granted by the order of 1881. A letter from an intendant to the minister in 1782 states "Among the privileged orders the most must be privileged orders and the proximation of sail, the public domain the post office and other royal mono polices of all kinds. There are few parashes which do not include one,

m many, two or three may be

The object of this letter is to dis stade the minister from proposing an extension of exemption from taxation to the clerks and servents of these privileged agents, which extension, says the Intendant is unceasingly backed by the Tarmers General that they may thus get rid of the necessity of paying salaries

NOTE (XLII)-Page 91 line 1

The sale of public employments which were called offices, was not quite unknown elsewhere. In Ger many some of the petty princes had extroduced the practice to a small ex tent and in insignificant departments of a lministration. Nowhere but in France was the system followed out on a grand scale

Note (VLIII)—Page 95, line 17

We must not be sur used strange as it may appear and as to find under the old monarchy public functionaries—many of them belonging to the public service, properly so called—plea ling before the Taring menta to ascertain the limits of their menta to ascertain the limits of their own powers The explanation of this is to be found in the first that all these questions were questions of 1 rt vate property as well as of public at ministration. What is here viewed as an encreachment of the julicial power was a mere consequence of the error which the Government had committed in attaching public functions to certain offices. These offices being bought and sold, and their holder's income I emg regulated by the work done and paul for, it was impossible to change the functions of an office without imparing some right for which money had been paul to a predecessor in the office.

To quote an instance out of a thousand —At Vans the Lieutenant General of Poluce carries on a pro longed suit with the Bureau de I inance of the town, to prove, that being charged with the duty of street watching, he has a right to execute all legal instruments relative to the paving of the streets, and to the fees for such instruments

The Bureau replies, that the paving is a duty thrown upon him by the nature of his office

The question in this case is not decided by the king in council, the parliament gives judgment, as the principal matter in dispute is the in terest of the capital devoted to the purchase of the office. The administrative question becomes a civil action firm their liberties and secure their

safeta

Lil crtu of the Person -They do sire that the servitude to the Llcle should be abolished wherever it still exists and that means should be formed to destroy the slave trade and to emanerpate the negroes, that every man should be free to travel or to reside wherever he may please whether within or without the limits of the king lom without being liable to arbitrary arrest, that the abuses of police regulations shall be reformed and that henceforth the police shall be under the control of the judges even in cases of revolt, that no one shall be hable to be arrested or tried except by his natural judges, that consequently the state prisons and other illegal places of detention shall be suppressed Some of them require the demolstion of the Bastille The nobility of Paris is especially urgent upon this point.

Are Lettres Closes or 'Lettres de Cachet to be prohibited!—If any danger of the State renders the arrest of a citizen necessary without his being immediately brought before the ordinary courts of justice measures should be taken to prevent any abuses either by grun, notice of the impresonment to the Consect of the or by some other proceeding The nobility demands the abolition of all special commissions all courts of attribution or exemption all pri vileges of commuttinus all dilatory judgments &c &c and requires that the severest punishment should be awarded to all those who should issue or execute an arbitrary order that in common juris liction (the only one that ought to be maintaine l) the necessary measures should be taken for securing individual liberty este cially as regards the criminal that justice should be dispensed gratui tously and that useless juris lictions should be suffressel The magi strates are instituted for the people and not the people fr the magi strates says one of the memor als A lemar 1 is even ma le that a co m eil an l gratuito is advocates for the poor shull be established in each bailiwick that the proceedings ballwick that the proceedings should be public and permission grante I to the litigants to plea I for themselves, that in criminal matters the pusoner should be provided with counsel, and that in all stages of the proceedings the judge should have adjoined to him a certain number of citizens, of the same position in life as the person accused who are to give their opinion relative to the fact of the crime or offence with which he is charged (referring on this point to the English constitution) that all punishments should be proportionate to the offence and alike for all that the punishment of death should be made more uncommon and all cor poral pains an I tortures & should be suppressed, that in fine the con dition of the prisoner and more especially of the simply accused should be ameliorated

According to these memorals, surress should be talen to profeet and will be alten to profeet and the profession of troops for land or sea service per mission should be given to convert the obligation of mistery service mile presence of a dejitation of the presence of a dejitation of the time Orders together, the dates of the distens of the distension of the distension of the distension of the surface of the distension of t

Treedom and It violability of Property—Its required that property should be inviolable and laced beyond all attack except for some reason of mdispensable public utility, in which case the Government onglit ogive a coust lerable and imme hate indemnity that confiscation should be abolished

Preedom of Trade Handwraft and Industrial Occupation—Tho freedom of trade and industry 0, hit to be secured and in consequence free lows and other prayleges of cer tain companies should be suppressed and the custom house lines all jut bagh to the front ers of the country

Free lot of Religion — The Cutholic religion is to be the only dominant religion in Trance but liberty of consenues is to be left to every loty and the non Catholics are tile restored to their civil rights and their property.

Freedom of the Press -Inviola bility of the Secrecy of the Post -The freedom of the press is to be secured and a law is to establish beforehand all the restrictions which may be considered necessary in the general interest Ecclesiastical cen sorship to exist only for books relative to the dogmas of the Church, and in all other cases it is considered suffi cient to take the necessary precau tions of knowing the authors and . printers Many of the memorials demand that offences of the press should only be tried by juries

The memorials unanimously de mand above all that the secrecy of letters entrusted to the post should be inviolably respected so that (as they say) letters may never be made to serve as means of accusation or testimony against a man They de nounce the opening of letters crudely enough, as the most odious espionage, masmuch as it institutes a violation of public faith

Instruction Education - The memorials of the nobility on thus point require no more than that active measures should be tal en to foster education that it should be dif fused throughout the country and that it should be directed upon prin ciples conformal le to the 1 resumed destination of the children, and, above all that a national elucation shoull be given to the children by teaching them their duties and their rights of citizenship. They urge the compilation of a political catechism in which the principal points of the constitution shoull le made clear to They do not however point out the means to be employed for the diffusion of instruction they do no more than demand elucational es tal lishments for the chil lren of the and g at nobility

Care to be taken of the Leople — A great number of the memorials lay much stress upon greater regar 11 cing shown to the people Several de n unce as a violation of the natural liberty of man the excesses comtnitted in the name of the pelice I v which as they say quantities of arti sans and useful citizens are arti trarily and without any regular exatumation drange Ito prison to louses of detention tenfre juently for slight offences or even upon simple sus picion All the memorials demand the definitive abolition of statute la The greater portion of the bailiwicks desire the permission to buy off the vassalage and toll dues, and several require that the receipt of many of the feudal dues should be rendered less onerous and that those paid upon franc fief should be abo lished 'It is to the advantage of the Government says one of the me morials to facilitate the purchase and sale of estates This reason was precisely the one given afterwards for the abolition at one blow of all the seignorial rights and for the sale of projecty in the condition of main Many of the memorials de sire that the dioit de colombies (exclusive right of keeping pigeons) should be rendered less prejudicial to agriculture Demands are made for the immediate abolition of the establishments used as royal game preserves and known by the name of capitaineries as a violation of the rights of property The substi tution of taxes less onerous to the reople in the mode of levying for those then existing is also desired

The nobility demand that efforts should be male to increase the prosperity and comfort of the country districts, that establishments for spinning and weaving coarse stuffs should be provided for the occupation of the country people luring the dead season of the year that public grana ries should le estallishel in each lailswick under the inspection of the provincial authorities in or ler to pro vi le against times of famine and to maintain the price of corn at a cer tun rate that means should be studied to unpr ve the agriculture of the country an I amel orate the con diti n of the country people that an augmentation should be given to the public works and that particular attent; n sloul l be | aid to the drain ing of marsh lan ls 'il o prevention of in indations to an I finally that the prizes of encouragement to commerce an I agriculture shoul I to distril ute ! in all the provinces

that the hospitals shall be broken int , smaller estal lishments

The memorials express the desire erected in each district that the asylums for beggars (lépôts de men dicité) should be suppressed and re placed by charitable workhouses (ateliers de charite), that funds for the aid of the sick and needs should be established under the management of the Provincial States and that surgeons physicians and midwives should be distributed among the ar randissements at the expense of the provinces to give their gratuitous services to the poor, that the courts of justice should likewise be gratin tous to the people finally that care shoul I be taken for the establishment of institutions for the blind the deaf and dumb foundling children to

Generally speaking in all these matters the order of nobles does no more than express its desire for reform without entering into any minor deviuls of excention. It may be easily seen that it mixed much less with the inferior classes than the lower order of dergy, and thus having come less in contact with their wiretchedness but thought less of the means for mitigating it.

favour of the maintenance of the noble in all his honours Some even desire that a distinctive mark should be given to the nobles to ensure their exterior recognition. It is impossible to imagine anything more character istic than this demand or more indi cative of the perfect similatude that must have already existed between the noble and the pleberan in spite of the difference of their social condi-In general in its memorials tions the nobility although it appears easily disposed enough to concede many of its more profitable rights clings energetically to its honorary So grently does it feel privileges itself alrealy hurried on by the tor rent of democracy and fear to sink in the stream that it not only wants to preserve all the privileges it al ready empoys but is desirous of in venting others it never possessed It is singular to remark how it has a presentiment of the impending dan ger without the actual perception of it With regard to public employments the nolles require that the As regards the clerical functions require the re-stablishment of the elective system in the bestowal of benefices or at least the appointment by the King of a committee that may enlighten him in the distribution of these benefices.

Lastly they express the opinion that for the future pensions ought to be given away with more discern ment, that they ought no longer to be exclusively lavished upon certain families, that no citizen ought to have more than one pension or receive the sulary of more than one place at a time and that all rever sions of such emoluments should be adolushed.

The Church and the Clergy—In matters which do not affect its own interests and especial constitution, the nobility is fer less scrupulous. In all that regards the privileges and organisation of the Church its eyes are opened wide enough to existing abuses.

It desares that the clergy should have no privileges an matters of taxa tion and that it should pay its debts without puting the burden of them on the nation moreover that the nonastic orders should undergo a complete reformation. The preater that the state of the product of spirit of their institution The majority of the bailiwicks express their desire that the tithes should be made less prejudicial to agriculture, many demand their al olition altogether The greater part of the tithes says one of the memorials is collected by those in cuml ents who do the least towards giving spiritual succour to the people It is easy to perceive that the latter order has not much forbearance for the former in its remarks. No greater respect was shown in its treatment of the Church itself Several bails wicks formally admit the right of the States General to suppress certain religious or lers and apply their revenues to some other use teen l'uliwicks declare the compe tence of the States General to regu late their discipline Several com lain that the I olidays (jours de fite) are too frequent are prejudicial to agriculture and are favourable to drunkenness, and suggest that in consequence a great number of them ought to be suppressed and kept only on the Sundays

Political Rights -As regards po litical rights the Instructions esta blish the right of every Frenchman to take his part in the government, either directly or indirectly, that is to say, the right to elect or be elected but without disturbing the gradation of social ranks, so that no one may nominate or be nominated otherwise than in his own Order This principle once established it is considered that the representative system ought to be established in such wise, that the power of taking a serious part in the direction of affairs may be guaranteed to each Order of the nation

With regard to the manner of voting in the Assembly of the States General the opinions differ desire a separate vote for each Order, others think that an exception ought to be made to this rule in the votes upon taxation, whilst others again consider that it should always be so 'The votes ought to be counted by individuals and not by Orders say Such a manner of pro the latter ceeding being the only sensible one, and the only one tending to remove and destroy that egotism of caste, which is the source of all our evilsto bring men together and lead them to that result which the nation has the right to expect from an Assembly, whose patriotism and great moral qualities should be strengthened by its united intelligence As an ım mediate adoption of this innovation however might prove dangerous in the existing state of general feeling many of the Instructions provide that it should be only decile I upon with caution and that the assembly I ad better decide whether it were not more prudent to put off the system of in lividual voting to the following States General. The nobility de man ls that in any case each Order should be allowed to preserve that dignity which is due to every French man and consequently that the humil atu g ceremonies to which the Tiers I tat was subjected under the old system should be abolished as, General lut that a credit alone should be opened fixed by the States. of which the Government might make use in case of war or any great calamity taking circ however that measures should be taken to convoke the States General in the shortest possible time, that all the national treasures shoul I be placed un ler the superintendence of the States that the expenses of each department should be fixed by them and that the surest measures should be taken to see that the funds noted were not fel easza

The greater part of the Instruc tions recommend the sup ression of those verntious taxes known under the names of insinuation enterue et and centime lever coming un ler the denomination of Adminis tration (Régie) of the Roy il domains upon the subject of which one of the memorials says The denomination of I egie is alone sufficient to wound the feelings of the nation inasmuch as it puts forward as belonging to the King matters which are in reality a part of the property of the citizens that all the domains, not alienated shoul I be placed under the administration of the Provincial States and no ordinance no edict upon financial matter should be given without the consent of the three Orders of the nation

It is evidently the intention of the nobility to confer upon the nation the whole of the financial adminis tration as well in the regulation of loans and taxes, as in the receipt of the same by the means of the General

and Provincial Assemblies

Ji dicial Potter In the same way, in the judicial organisation it has a ten lency towards ren lering the lower of the julges at least in a great measure dependent upon the nation assembled And thus many of the memorials declare that the maga trates should be responsible for the fact of their al pointments to the nation assembled that they should not le dismisse l from their functions without the consent of the States General that no court of justice under any pretext whatever should be disturbed in the exercise of its functions without the consent of these States that the disputed mat ters in the Appeal Court as well as those before the Larliament should be deer led upon by the States Gene ral The majority of the Instruc tions ad I that the julges ought only to be nominated by the him, upon presentation to him I v the people

Executive Power -The executive n wer is exclusively reserved to the king, but nece sary limits are pro pose ! in order to prevent its abuse

I or instance in the alministra tion the Instructions is more that the state of the accounts of the diffe rent del artments shoul I be ren lered public by loing printel, likewise that before employing the troops in the defence of the country from without the King shoul linake known his precise intention to the States General, that in the country itself the troops shoull never be employed aguast the citizens except upon the requisition of the States General that the number of the troops should be limited and that two thirds of them alone should remain in common times upon the secon l effective list and that the Government ought to keep away all the foreign troops it may have in its jay from the centre of the king lom and send them to the frontiers

In perusing the Instructions of the nobility the realer cannot fail to be struck more than all with the conviction that the nobles are so essentially of their own time have all the feelings of the day and employ its language with perfect fluency they talk of the mahenal le rights of man and the principles inherent to the social compact matters appertaining to the indi vilial they generally look to his rights in those appertaining to so ciety to its dities. The printiples of their political of inions appear to them as absolute as those of moral sty both one and the other being based fron reason. In expressing their desire to abolish the last rem nants of serfdom they talk of effac of the last traces of the legradation of the human race. They sometimes denominate Louis XVI the Crizen King and frequently speak of that crime of less nation (treason to the nation) which afterwards was so frequently imputed to them elves

In their opinion as in that of every one else everything was to be expected from the results of public education which the States were to direct 'The States General, says one of the Cahiers 'must take care to inspire a national character by alterations in the education of chil Lake the rest of their con tem oraries they show a lively and constant desire for uniformity in the legislation excepting however, in all that affecte I the existence of ranks. They are as desirous as the Tiers Ltat of administrative uniformity -unifor mity of measures &c They point out all kinds of reforms and expect that these reforms should be radical According to their suggestions, all the taxes without exception should be abolished or transferred and the whole judicial system change! (x cept in the case of the Seignorial Courts of Justice, which they consi dered only to need unprovement They as well as all the other brench looked upon I rance as a field for experiment - a sort of political model farm in which every portion was to be turned up and every experiment tried, except in one special little corner, where their own privileges blossomed It must be said to their honour however, that even this was but little spared by them. In short as may be seen ly reading their memorials, all the nobles wanted in order to make the Revolution was that they should be plebering

NOTE (VLVII)-Pige 98, hne 26

This liberal disposition on the part of the priests in political matters, which displayed itself in 1789, was not only produced by the excitement of the moment, evidence of it had already appeared at a much earlier period. It exhibited itself, for in stance, in the province of Berri as early as 1779, when the elergy offered to make voluntary donations to the amount of 68 000 livres, upon the sole condition that the provincial administration should be preserved

NOTE (\LVIII)-Page 100, line 11

It must be curefully remurked that, if the political conditions of society were without any ties the critical state of society still lind many Within the errele of the different classes men were bound to each other, something even still re manned of that close the which had once existed between the class of the Seigneurs and the people, and all though all though all this only existed in civil society, its consequence was undirectly felt in poliucal society. The men, bound by these ties, formed masses that were irregular and unorganised, but refractory beneath the band of authority. The Revolution by breaking all social ties, without establishing any political ties in their place, prepared the way at the same time for equality and servitude.

NOTE (XLIX)-Page 101, line 5

EXAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE COURTS EXPRESSED THEMSELVES UPON THE OCCASION OF CERTAIN ARBITRARY ACTS

It appears, from a memorial laid before the Controleur General in 1781. by the Intendant of the Gent ralité of Paris, that it was one of the customs of that Generalité that the parishes should have two syndics the one elected by the inhabitants in an Assembly presided over by the Subdeligue the other chosen by the Intendant and considered the over seer of the former A quarrel took place between the two syndics in the parish of Rueil the elected syndic not choosing to obey the chosen syndic The Intendant, by means of M de Bretenil had the elected syndic put into the prison of La Force for a fortinght, he was arrested then dismissed from his post and another was put in his place. Thereupon the Tarliament upon the requisition of the impressored syndic commenced proceedings at law the issue of which I have not been able to find but during which it declared that the impresonment of the planniff and the nullification of his election could only professored. The pudicular interface, it seems, were then sometimes rather hard in the mouth

NOTE (L.)-Page 103 line 30

So far from being the case that the ancien rejune it may be said on the enlightened and wealth's classes were oppressed and enslaved under bourgeoine were frequently far too

free to do all they liked, since the Roval authorit di Inot dare to prevent members of these classes from constantly creating thimselves an exceptional position to the detriment of the people, and almost always considered it necessary to secretice the latter to them in order to obtain their good will or part a stop to their ill humour. It may be sail that in the ci, becent century as I renchman belonging, to these classes could more fashly resist the Government and fire it to use con ciliatory measures with him than an Lughshum of the same position in the could have done at that time. The authorities often considered themselves obliged to use towards such a man a far more temporasure and timil policy than the Lughsh Government would are have thought itself bound to employ towards an En, lish subject in the same category—60 wrong is it to confirmed industrial than a free citree the subject of the same category the subject in the same category sees when the same category than the same category that the same category than the same category than the same category than the same category that the same category than the same category that the s

these Stewards only farmed in his name. This Prince (who must have been extremely wealthy) not only caused this 'abuse,' as he termed it, to be put a stop to, but obtained the reimbursement of 5344 hvres 15 sous which he had been improperly made to pay, and which was charged upon the inhabitants

NOTES LIV -LVI

Note (LIV) -- Page 108, line 7

EXAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE PECUNIARY CLAIMS OF THE CLERGY ALIENATED FROM THEM THE HILARTS OF THOSE WHOSE ISOLATED POSITION OCCURT TO HAVE CONCLULATED THEM.

The Curé of Noisa, asserted that the inhabitants were obliged to under take the repairs of his burn and wine press and asked for the imposition of a local tax for that purpose. The Inlen dant gave answer that the inhabitants were only obliged to repair the pur sonage house, and that the burn and wine press were to be at the expense of this pastor, who was evidently more busied about the affuirs of his farm than his spiritual flock (1767)

Note (LV)-Page 110, line 4

In one of the memorals sent up in 1788 by the peacuits—a memoral written with much clearness and in a moderate tone in answer to an inquiry metituited by a Provincial Assembly—the following passages occur—In addition to the abuses occur—In addition to the abuses occusioned by the mode of leyying the taille, there exists that of the garmisances. These men generally arrive five times during the collection of the taille. They are commonly startifies, or Swiss soldiers. They remain every time four or five days in the parish and are taxed at 205 see 110, line 4 some adaptive the tarreceipt office As to the assessment of the tatlle, we will forbear to point out the too well known as the second of the tatlle, we have measures employed and the bad effects produced by the officency receipt and the parts played by officers who are frequently incapile and almost adways prairal and undertie. They have been the cause, however, of many disturbances and quarrels and has occasioned proceedings at law, extremely expense for the parties plending and very advantageous to the courts.

Norr (LNI)-Page 118, line 32

Turgot has given descriptions of the inconvenience and hardship of forced labour for the transport of muli tary baggage, which after a perusal of the office papers appear not to have I een exaggerated Among other things he says that its chief hurdship consisted in the uncount distribution of a very heavy burden inasmuch as it fell entirely upon a small numl er of parishes, which had the misfortune of being placed on the high road The distance to be done was often one of five six, or sometimes ten and fifteen leagues In which case three days were necessary for the journey out and home again. The compensa tion given to the landowners only amounted to one fifth of the expense that fell upon them The period when forced labour was required was gene rally the summer the time of harvest The oxen were almost always over driven, and frequently fell ill after having been employed at the workso much so that a great number of landowners preferred giving a sum of 15 to 20 larges rather than supply a The conse waggon and four oxen quent confusion which took place was unavoidable The persents were constantly exposed to violence of treatment from the military officers almost always demanded more than was their due, and some times they obliged the drivers by force, to harness saddle horses to the vehicles at the risk of doing them a serious injury Sometimes the sol diers insisted upon riding upon carts already overloaded, at other times, impatient at the slow progress of the oxen they gooded them with their swords and when the peasants re monstrated they were maltreated

NOTE (LXII)-Page 113, line 38

FXAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH FORCED LABOUR WAS APPLIED TO EVERYTHING

A correspondence arising, upon a complaint made by the Intendent of the Naval department at Rochefort concerning the difficulties made by the peasants who were obliged by the cornée to cart the wood purchased by the navy contractors in the dif ferent provinces for the purposes of ship I uilding shows that the peasants were in truth still (1775) obliged to do this force I labour the price of which the Intendent himself fixed The Minister of the Navy transferred the complaint to the Intendant of Tours with the order that he must see to the supply of the carriages required The Intendant M Ducluzel refused to authorise this species of forced labour whereupon the Minister wrote him a threatening letter telling him that he would have to answer for his refusal to the hing The Inten dant to this replied at once (Decem ler 11th 1775) with firmness that during the ten years he had been

Intendant at Tours he never had chosen to authorise these correct on account of the mevitable abuses re sulting from them for which the price fixed for the use of the vehicles · For fre was no compensation quently says has letter the animals are crippled by the weight of the enormous masses they are obliged to drag through roads as lal as the time of year when they are ordered What encouraged the Inten dant in his resistance seems to have been a letter of M Turgot which is annexed to the papers on this matter It is dated on July 30th 1774 shortly after his becoming Minister, and it says that he himself never authorised these corres at Limoges and ap proves of M Ducluzel for not autho nsing them at Tours

It is proved by some portions of this correspondence that the timber contractors frequently exacted this forced labour even when they were not authorised to do so by the contracts made between themselves and the State maximuch as they thus pro fited at least one third in the economy of their transport expenses ample of the profit thus of tamed is given by a Subdeleque in the follow ing computation Distance of the transport of the wood from the spot where it is cut to the river, by al most impracticable cross roads six lengues, time employed in going and coming back, two days, reckoning (as an indemnity to the correlables) the square foot at the rate of six hards a league, the whole amounts to 13 francs 10 sous for the journey -a sum scarcely sufficient to pay the actual expenses of the small land owner, of his assistant and of the oven or horses harnessed to his cart

His own time and trouble, and the work of his beasts are dead losses to him ' On May 17th, 1776 the Inten dant was served by the Minister with a positive order from the King to have this corver executed cluzel being then dead, his successor, M I I scalopier, very readily obeyed, and published an ordinance declaring that the Subdélequé had to make the assessment of the amount of libour to be levied upon each parish in con sequence of which the different per sons obliged to statute labour in the said parishes were constrained to go according to the time and place set forth by the syndies to the spot where the wood might happen to be, and cart it at the price regulated by the Subdéliané

NOTE (LXIII)-Page 115, line 22

FXAMPLE OF THE MANNER IN WHICH THE PEASINTS WERE OFTEN TREATED

In 1768 the King allowed a remit tance of 2000 francs to be made upon the taille in the parish of Chapelle Blanche near Saumur The cure wanted to appropriate a part of this sum to the construction of a belfry in order to get rid of the sound of the bells that annoyed him as he said in his parsonage house. The inhabit ants complained and resisted Subdel gue took part with the cure and had three of the principal inhabit ants arrested during the night and t ut into prison Further examples may be found in a Royal order to imprison for a fortnight a woman who had insulted two of the mounted rural police and another order for the imprisonment for a fortnight of a stocking weaver who had spoken ill of the same police In this latter case the Inten dant replied to the Minister that he had already put the man in prisona proceeding that met with the ap proval of the Minister This abuse of the mareel auss e had arisen from the fact of the violent arrest of several legars that seems to have greatly shocke I the population. The Sul delegue it appears in arresting the weaver made publicly known that all who should continue to insult the maréchaussée should be even still more severely numshed

It appears by the correspondence between the Subdéléqué and their Intendant (1760 1770) that orders were given by him to them to have all ill doing persons arrested-not to be tried but to be punished forthwith by imprisonment. In one instance the Subdelegue asks levre of the In tendant to condemn to perpetual imprisonment two dangerous beg gars whom he had arrested, in an other we find the protest of a fither against the arrest of his son as a vagabond because he was travelling without his passport Again a house holder of \ demands the arrest of a man one of his nei_hbours who had come to establish himself in the parish to whom he had been of ser vice but who had behavel ill and was disagrecable to him, and the Intendant of Paris writed to request the Inten lant of Rouen to be lin! enough to render this service to the householler who is one of his friends.

In another case an Intendent re plies to a person who wants to have some beggars set at liberty, saying that the Depót des Mendicants was not to be considered as a prison, but only as a house intended for the detention of beggars and vagabonds, as an 'administrative correction' This idea has come down to the French Penal Code, so much have the traditions of the old monarchy, in these matters, maintained themselves

NOTE (LAIV)-Page 121, line 7

It has been said that the character of the philosophy of the eighteenth century was a sort of adoration of human reason-a boundless confi dence in its almighty power to trans form at its will laws, institutions and But, upon examination, we shall see that in truth it was more their own reason that some of these philosophers adored than human rea None ever showed less confi dence in the wisdom of mankind than these men I could name many who had almost as much contempt for the masses as for the Divinity The latter they treated with the arrogance of rivals, the former with the arrogance of upstarts A real and respectful submission to the will of the majority was as far from their minds as sub mission to the Drame will Almost all the revolutionists of after days have displayed this double character There is a wide distance between their disposition and the respect shown by the English and Ameri cans to the opinion of the majority of their fellow citizens Individual rea son in those countries has its own pride and confidence in itself, but is never insolent, it has thus led the way to freedom whilst in France it has done nothing but invent new forms of servitude

Note (LXV)-Page 132 line 15

Trudered the Greet in his Me mors has said 'Your great men such as Fontenelle Voltaire Hobbes Collary, Shaftesbury, Bolingbroke have struck a mortal blow at religious truck and hot bods into that when the struck and hot bods in the struck with the struck of the struck

It may be seen by the above pas sage that Frederick the Great at the time he wrote those lines that is to say, in the middle of the eighteenth century, still at that time looked upon England as the seat of irreligious doctrines But a still more striking fact may be gathered from it namely, that one of the sovereigns the most experienced in the knowledge of man. and of affairs in general does not ap pear to have the slightest idea of the political utility of religion The Grors of judgment in the mind of his in structors had evilently disordered the natural qualities of lus own

.,

NOTE (LAVI)-Page 150 line 1

The sprit of progress which showed itself in I'mnee at the end of the eighteenth century appeared at the same time throughout all Ger many, and was everywhere accom panied by the same desire to change the institutions of the time man historian gives the f llowing picture of what was then goin, en in

In the second half of the eigh teenth century the new gurst of the age tral fally introduced itself even into the ecclesiastical territ ries. Reforms were legun in them, in listry an I tok ranco ma le the ir way in them on every sile and that enhaltened absolutism which had alrea is taken possession of the lirge states pene trate leven there It must be sail at the same time that at no period of the culticenth teatury had these ec cleanatical territories possessed such remarkable on Lestunal le Lrinces as during the last ten years preceding the I reach Revolution .

The resemblance of this picture to that which I rance then offered is remarkable. In I rance the move ment in favour of amelioration and progress began at the sume epoch, and the men the most able to govern appeare I on the stage just at the time when the Revoluti n was about to

awallow up everything

It must be observed also how much all that portion of Germany was visilly hurried on by the move mant of en disation and political frotree in I rance

NOTE (LXVII)-Lage 151 line I

THE LAWS OF PUBLAND THAT IT IS POSSIBLE FOR INSTITUTIONS TO BE FULL OF DESICTS AND YET NOT PREVENT THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE PLINGIAL FND AND AIM FOR WHICH THEY WERE CSTABLISHED

The power which nut one possess of prospering in spite of the imper fections to le met with in secondary portions of their institutions as long as the general principles and the actual spirit wh ch animate those in stit itions are full f lif an l vicour is a thenomenon which manifests itself with peculiar listinciness when the 11 cal constitution of Fuglan l in the last century as described by Blackstone is looke l into

The attention is immel ately ar reste l by two great diversities, that are very striking --

First The liversity of the laws becondly The liversity of the Courts that administer them

Diversit | of the Laws -(1 The laws are different for Englan ! (properly so called) for Scotland for Ireland for the different European dopen lencies of Great Britain such as the Isle of Man the Channel Is lands, &c and finally for the British Colonies

(?) In England itself may be fo ind four kinds of laws the com mon law statute law canon law and county The common law is itself divided into general customs adopted throughout the whole kingdom and customs specially belonging to cer tain manors or certain towns or sometimes only to certain classes such as the trades These customs sometimes differ greatly from each other, as those for in tance which in opposition to the general ten lines of the Luglish laws require an equal distribution of pr perty among all tl e el ildren (gavelkin l) and what is still more singular give a right of primogeniture to the youngest child

(borough English) II -Diversity of the Courts -Blackstone informs us that the law has instituted a prodinous variety of different courts Some idea of this may be obtained from the following extremely summary analysis —

(1) In the first place there were the Courts established without the limits of England, properly so called such as the Scotch and Irish courts which never were dependencies of the superior courts in England al though an appeal I es from these several jurisdictions to the House of Lor ls

(2) In England itself if I am correct in my memory among the classifications of Blackstone are to be found the following

1 Eleven kin is of Courts of Com mon Law four of which it is true of arrivocratic pre lominance and unquality overphing that tends to leaven any privilege of any individual before the face of justice to afford guarantees to the weak acquiet the strong and to you apprecioumnance to the state—which is not fully individual to the state of the state in the state
of the state in the state
it diministics in importance in proportion to the inclination of the secual state and political constitution to wards demographe.

war is democracy In studying the English judicial system upon these principles it will be found that, although it permitted the existence of every defect that could contribute to ren ler justice in hampere 1 that country obscure slow, expensive, and inconvenient it had taken infinite precautions to prevent the strong from ever being fivoured at the expense of the weak, or the State at the expense of the private individual The more the observer penetrates into the details of the English legislation the more he will see that every citizen was provided with all sorts of weapons for his defence, and that matters were so arranged as to affind to every one the greatest number of guarantees possible a_mart partiality, actual venality, and that sort of venality which is more common and especially more dangerous in democratic times—the venality consisting of the servility of the courts towards the Greatment.

the Government In this point of view the English judicial system in spite of the nume rous secondary errors that may still be found in it as pears to me superior to the French which although almost entirely untainted it is true by any one of these defects does not at the same time offer in like degree the principal qualities that are to be found in it which although excellent in the guarantees it affords to every citizen in all disputes between indi viduals fails precisely in that point that ought always to be strengthened in a democratic state of society like the French namely in the guaran tees aff rded to individuals against the State

Note (LXVIII)-Page 151 line 19

ADVANTAGES ENJOYED BY THE GÉNÉRALITÍ OF PARIS

This Generalité was as much favourel in chritise bestowel by the Government as it was in the loving of taxee An example may be found in a letter of the Controleur Conference to the Inter Journal of the May 22nd 1787) in which he informate the latter that the King had fixed the sum which was to be employed upon "works of charry during the year in the Genéralité of Paris at 172,800 livres and 100 000 livres

moreover were destine I for the pur chase of come, to be given to different husbandmen. It may be seen by this letter that the sum of 172000 livres was to be distributed by the Intend int alone with the provise that he was to conform himself to the general rules a leady made known to him by the Government and that he was to lay the account of the distribution before the Controller Genéral for a proval

Note (LXIX.)-Page 152 line 27

The administration of the old monarchy was made up of a multi tude of different powers which hal been established at different times but benerally for the purposes of the Treasury and not of the Administration properly so called and which frequently hal the same field of action—It was thus impossible to avoid confusion and contention other

Note (LNNII)-Page 163 line 24

HOW IT WAS THAT REVOLUTIONALY IDEAS MATUPALLY SPRANG UP IN MENS MINDS PYLN UNDER THE OLD MONARCHY

In 1779 an arcat addressed a petition to the Council for a decree do establish a maximum of the price of straw through out the whole king

Norr (LAXIII)-Page 163, line 32

The Heal Engineer in a letter written to the Intendant in 1781 relative to a demant for an increase of intermification thus expresses himself. The claimant does not pay heed to the fact that the indemnifications granted are an especial favour to the Gereralite of Tours and that seeple ought to consider themselves very fortunate in recovering only a part of their loss. If such compensations as the claumant requires were to be given four millions would not suffice.

NOTE (LAXIV)-Page 167 line 39

The Revolution did not break out on account of this prosperity but that active uneasy intelligent inno vating ambitious spirit that was desimed to produce the Revolution the democratic spirit of new states of society—began to stir up everything and before it overthrew for a period the social state of France was al ready strong enough to agriate and develop it

Note (LAXV)-Page 169 line 13

COLLISION OF THE DIFFERENT ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS IN 1787

The following may be taken as an example—The intermediate commission of the Provincial Assembly of the Red France claimed the administration of the Depth de Men dieter The Internation is seen hands its remaining in his own hands the province to the province by the facility of the Province During it e discuss on the intermediate commission communeated with the intermediate communeates of other provinces in order to learn their opinions. Among other answers given to its quest one causes one from the intermediate communeate of Champagne informing that of the lie de France that it had met will it o very same difficult as and land offered the same resistance.

Note (LXXVI)-Page 172, line 2

In the minutes of the first Provincial Assembly of the file de Prance, the following declaration may be found, proceeding from the mouth of the reporter of the committee — Up to the present time the functions of syndic, which are far more onerous than honourable, are such as to indis pose from accepting them all those who unite a sufficient competency to the intelligence to be expected from their position in life.

Note (LXXVII)—Page 173, line 9

FEUDAL PIGHTS, WHICH STILL EXISTED AT THE PERIOD OF THE REVO LUTION, ACCORDING TO THE FEUDAL LAWYERS

It is not the intention of the author here to write a treatise upon feudal rights and, least of all, to attempt any research into their pos sible origin. It is simply his desire to point out those which were still exercised in the eighteenth century These rights played so important a part at that time, and have since re tained so large a space in the imagi nation of the very persons who have no longer anything to suffer from them, that it was a most interesting task to find out precisely what they were when the Revolution destroyed them all For this purpose a great number of terriers or rolls of feudal manors were studied -those of the most recent date being selected But this manner of proceeding led to no thing, for the feudal rights although regulated by a legal code, which was the same throughout the whole of feudal Europe, were infinitely various in their kinds according to the pro vince or even the districts, where they existed The only system then which appeared likely to lead in an approximate manner, to the required result was the following - These feudal rights were continually giving rise to all sorts of disputes and litiga In these cases it was neces sary to know how these rights were acquired how they were lost, in what they consisted exactly, which were the duce that could only be collected by virtue of a 1 oval patent which those that could only be esta Hished by private title which these on the contrary that had no need of formal titles, and might be collected upon the strength of local custom, or even in virtue of long usage Again, when they were for sale, it was necessary to know in what manner they were to be valued, and what capital each of them represented, according to its importance All these points, so immediately affecting a thousand pecuniary inter ests, were subject to litigation, and thus was constituted a distinct class of legal men, whose only occupation it was to elucidate them these men wrote during the second half of the eighteenth century, some even just upon the threshold of the Revolution They were not lawyers, properly speaking, but practitioners, whose only task it was to point out to professional men the rules to be followed in this special and little attractive portion of legal science By an attentive study of these feu distes, a tolerably minute and distinct idea of a subject, the size and con fusion of which is at first bewilder ing may be at last come at author gives below the most succinct summary he was able to make of his work These notes are principally derived from the work of Ldmé de I reminville, who wrote about the year 1750, and from that of Re naul lon written in 1765 and entitled · Trasté historique et pratique des Drosts Seigneuriaux

The cens (that is to say, the per petual quit rent in kind and in money which, by the feudal laws, was affixed to the possession of cer tain lands) still in the eighteenth century, affected most deeply the position of a great number of landed proprietors This cens continued to he indivisible that is to say, the entire cens might be claimed of any one of the possessors of the property, subject to the cens at will It was always irredeemable No proprietor of any lands subject to the cens, could sell them without being ex posed to the retrait censuel that is to say, without being obliged to let the property be taken back at the price of the sale but this only took place in certain contumes The con tume of Paris which was the most general, did not recognise this right

Lods et Ventes -It was a gene ral rule that in every part of the country where the coutume prevailed the sale of every estate subject to the cens should produce what were called lods et centes, in other words the fines paid to the lords of the manor upon the alienation of this kind of property These dues were more or less considerable according to the customs of the manor but were everywhere considerable enough, they existed just as well in parts where the drost ecret (written law) was established They generally consisted of one sixth of the price and were then named lods But in these parts the lord of the manor had to establish his rights In what was calle I pays écrit as well as in pags contumier the cens gave the lord of the manor a privilege which took precedence of all other debts on the estate years like the rentes foncieres whilst the terrage seigneurial was irredeem able Lands subject to terrage could not be mortgaged without the consent of the lord of the manor.

of the lord of the manor Bordelage -A right which only existed in the Nivernais and Bour bonnais countries and which con sisted in an annual quit rent paid in money, corn, and fowls upon lands subject to the cens This right en tailed very rigorous consequences non payment of the dues during three years gave cause for the exer case of the commuse or entry to the advantage of the lord of the manor A tenant owing the bordelage was more open than any other to a variety of annoyances on his pro Sometimes the lorl of the manor possessed the right of claim ing his inheritance, even when he died having heirs who hal legil rights to the succession. This was the most rigorous of any of the feu lal rights, and the law had finally restricted it only to rural inheritances 'For' as our author says the peasant is always the mule ready to bear every bur len

Marciage was the name of Jecu har dues levied upon the Josessors of land subject to the cens in very few places and consisting in certain payments due only upon the natural death of the lard of the manor

Dines Infeo lees —There still existed in the eighteenth century a great number of tithes in fiel They were generally established by separate contract and did not result from cise I by the clearest declaration of the continues or where that was want in. By the most precise title

If in des l'endanges—The was still practised throughout the whole of the kingdom in the eighteenth century. It was a simple right of Julica attacle to the right of harder justice. In order to exercise it the Segment, who was Hand Justicer, did not need to possess any other title. The bean des ten langes was obligatory upon everybody. The contames of Burgen by give the Set pieur, the right of gathering in his vintage a day before any other vine proprietor Droit de Bantin -This was a right still possessed by a quantity of Sermeurs (as our authors have it) either ly custom or special title to sell the wine grown upon their manors for a certain period of time in general a month or forty days before any one else Among the grandes contumes those of Tours Anjou the Maine and La Marche alone establishelit anl halregula tions for it A verlict of the Cour des At les dated 28th Aug 1st 1751 authorises publicans (as an exception to the common rule) to sell wine during the ba um, but this must l ave referre I only to the wine of the Scijneur male from that years growth The contun es that establish and regulate the right of banva a founded upon legal title Droit le Blairie was a right le longing to the Seigneur who was Haut J stierer to grant permission to the inhabitants to have their cattle graze upon lands situate I through out his jurisdiction or upon waste lands This right did not exist in any parts regulated by drost écrit but it was common enough in those where the drost contumier was in force It was to be found under different denominations more parti cularly in the Bourbonnais Nivernals Auvergne and Burgundy This right rested upon the supposi tion that the whole territory oran nally belonged to the Seigner r in such wise that after the distribution of the greater part into fefs cencites and other concess one of lands upon out rents there still remained por tions which could only be used free waste patter, ground and of which to the tight and the temp oraty use to others. The blance, but it could only be claimed by a Segment who was Hant Justicier and was man tuned only by some special title, or at least by old claims supported by lone possession.

long possession Peages -According to our au thors, there originally existed a I ro ligious number of manorial tolls mon bridges rivers and roads Lous MV dil away with a great number of them In 1724 a com mission nominated to examine into the titles by which the tolls were clumed suppressed twelve bundred of them and in 1765 they were still being constantly suppressed. 'Il o principle observed in this re spect save Renauldon 'was that masmuch as the toll was a tax it was necessary to be founded not only ur on legal title I ut upon one emanat ing from the sovereign The toll was leviel De par le Roi the conditions of the toll was that it should be established by tarif regu lating the dues which each kind of merclandise had to 12y It was necessary that this tarif should be approved by a decree of the Council approved by a decree of the Concession says one author had to be followed by unin terrupted possession. In spite of these precautions legally taken it appears that the value of the tolls had greatly increased in later times 1 know one toll says the same author 1 at was farmed out a cen try ago at 100 luves and now brings in 1400 and another farmed try ago at the brings in the brings in 1400 and another farmed the property of the later of the The principal of the later of the Ordinance of 1609 and the Decrees of 1688, 1693 1794 1775

The authors I have quoted al though in general favourable enough to feudal rights acknowle are that great abuses were committed in the levying of the tolls

Bacs.—The right of ferries differed materially from the right of toll. The latter was only levie lup in merchandise the former upon indiviluals an mils and carriages. It was necessary that thurnght in order to be exercised, should likewise be authorise by the king, and the dues, to be levied, had to be fixed by the same decree of Conneil that established and authorised it

Droit de Ley le (to which many other names have been given in dif ferent places) was a tax levied upon merchandise brought to fairs and markets Many lords of the manor (as appears by our feudistes) con sidered this right as one attached to the right of haute justice, and wholly manorial, but quite mis takenly, masmuch as it could only be authorised by the hing events this right only belonged to the Seigneur, who was Haut Justicier he levied the police fines, to which the exercise of the right gave occa It appears, however that, al though by theory the drost de leyde could only emanate from the hing it was frequently set up solely upon the basis of feudal title or long pos 868810n

It is very certain that fairs could not be established otherwise than by

Royal authorisation The lords of the manor, however, had no need of any precise title, or any concession on the part of the King for the exercise of the right of regulating the weights and measures to be used by their vascals in all fairs and markets held upon the manor It was enough for the right to be founded upon custom and constant possession Our authors say that all the Kings who one after the other were desirous of re-establishing not formity in the weights and measures failed in the attempt. Matters had been allowed to remain at the same point where they were when the old

contumes were drawn up

Chemns (Rights exercised by the lords of the manor upon roads.)
—The high roads called Chemins and Ho (king s highway) belonged, in fact to the sovereigns alone, their formation their reparation and the offences committed upon them were beyond the cognissing of the Sergieus of the commission of the Sergieus as were Hauts Sergieus as were Hauts Sergieus They had all the rights of ourse and police upon them and their judges took co, in-since of all the off-ince committed upon them, except in Royal cases. At an eather period the Serjineurs had been obliged to keep up the high roads a saming through their reigneurs, and, as a compensation for the expenses incurred in these repairs they were allowed the dues arising from tolls, settlement of boundaries and lar riers; but, at this spoch the king had resumed the general direction of the high roads.

I aux -All the rivers both navi gable and floatable (admitting the passage of rafts), belonged to the hing although they flowed through the property of lords of the manor, and in space of any talle to the con (See Ordinance of 1063) If the lords of the manor levied any dues upon these rivers, it was those arising from the rights of fishing the mills ferry boats, and bridge tolls &c . in virtue of concessions emanat ing only from the hing There were some lords of the manor who still arrogated to them-elves the rights of jurisdiction and police upon these rivers . but this manifestly only arose from usurpation, or from concessions um roperly acquired The smaller rivers unquestionably lelonged to the Seigneurs through whose property they flowed possessed in them the same rights of property of jurisdiction and police, which the King possessed upon the navigable rivers All Seigneurs Hauts Justiciers were universally the lor is of the non navigable rivers run ning through their territory They wanted no other legal title for the ex ercise of their claims than that which conferred the right of haute justice There were some customs such as the Coutume du Berre that au thorised private individuals to erect a mill upon the seignorial river pass ing through the lands they occupied, without the permission of the Sei gneur The Coutume de Bretagne only granted this right to private personages who were noble matter of general right it is very certain that the Seigneur Haut Jus ticser had alone the right of erecting mills throughout every part of his jurisdiction. No one was entitled to erect larriers for the protection of his property without the permission of the judges of the Sciencer.

I ontaines - Puits - Routoirs -I tange -The rain water that fell upon the high reads belonged exclu sively to the Seigneurs Hauts Jus ficiers, they alone were enabled to dispose of it The Seigneur Haut Justicier possessed the right of con structing ponds in any part through out his jurisdiction and even upon lands in the possession of those who resided under it, upon the condition of paying them the price of the ground out under water Private individuals were only alle to make 1 ands upon their own soil; and, oven for this, many confumes require that permission should be obtained of the Seigneur The contumes, however, thus requiring the acquiescence of the Seigneur, establish that it is to be given gratuitously La Peche -The right of fishing on navigable or floatable rivers belonged only to the Ling, and he alone could make grants of this right The Royal Judges alone had the right of judging offences against the right of fishers There were many Seigneurs, how ever who exercised the right of fish ing in these streams, but they either possessed by concession made by the Ling or had usurped it No person could fish, even with the rod, in non navigable rivers without permission from the Seigneur Haut Justicier within whose limits they flowed A judgment (dated April 80th 1749) condemns a fisherman in a similar case Even the Seigncurs themselves however were obliged in fishing to observe the general regulations re specting fisheries The Seigneur Hant Justicier was enabled to give the right of fishing in his river to tenants in fief or a cens

La Chasse—The right of the chase was not allowed by the far and out like that of fishing. It was a per sonal right, arraing from sideration that it belonged to the King and that the nobles themselves could not exercise it in the interior of their own jurisdiction without the jarmission of the King This doc time was established in an Ordinance of 1600 for 30). The judges of the Segmenr had the jower of taking cognisance of all officies against the rights of the clarse, except in cases appertaining to beless are see (signifing, it would appear, what were generally called "grouse beles" stags, does, de), which were consultered Royal

The right of shooting and hunting was more interdicted to the non noble than any other The fee tel of the non noble did not even bestow The Long never granted it in his own hunt So closely observed was this principle, and so rigorous was the right consulered, that the Sci gneur was not allowed to give any permission to hunt But still it did constantly occur that beigneurs granted such permissions not only to nobles but to non nobles Seigneur Haut Justicier possessed the faculty of hunting and shooting on any part of his own jurisdiction, but alone He was allowed to make regulations and establish prohibitions upon matters appertaining to the chase throughout its extent Seigneur de Tief, although not hav ing the fendal power of judicial courts was allowed to hunt and shoot in any part of his fief Nobles who pos sessed neither ficf nor jurisdiction were allowed to do so upon the lands belonging to them in the immediate ner hbourhood of their dwelling houses It was decided that the non noble possessing a park upon the ter ritory of a Seigneur Haut Justicier was obliged to leave it open for the diversion of the lord But this judg ment was given as long ago as 1668

of derennes—Rabbit warrens could the established without title right. Non nobles as well as nobles were allowed to have rabbit warrens but the nobles alone were allowed to keep forrets.

Colombiers — Certain coultimes only give the right of colombiers à pied (lovecots standing spart from a pied (lovecots standing spart from a building) to the Scipneris Hauts Justiciers, others grant it to all holders of fiels. In Dauphiny, Brit was, and Normandy no non noble to possess douced to possess douced alone were allowed to keep pigeons. The penalties pronounced against those who killed the pigeons were extremely severe the most afflictive extremely severe the most afflictive.

punishments were sometimes be stowed

Such, according to the authors above cited were the principal feu dal rights still evercised and ducs still levied in the second half of the cigh teenth century 'The rights here mentioned, they add 'are those generally established at the present time But there are still very many others, less known and less widely practised, which only occur in cer tain contumes, or only in certain scigneuries in virtue of peculiar titles.' These rarer and more re stricted feu lal rights of which our authors thus make mention and which they enumerate amount to the number of ninety mue, and the greater part of them are directly pre judicial to agriculture, masmuch as they give the Seigneurs certain rights over the harvests or tolls upon the sale or transport of grain fruit, provisions &c Our authors say that most of these feudal rights were out of use in their day, I have reason to believe however, that a great number of these dues were still levied in some places in 1780

After having studied, among the writers on feudal rights in the eight teenth century, the principal feudal rights still exercised, I was desirous of finding out what was their import ance in the eyes of their contemporaries at least as regarded the fortimes of those who levied them and those who had to pry them Remuldon one of the authors I have mentioned gives us an insight into this matter i v laying before us the rules that legal men had to folthe rules that the rules that the rules found inghts which still existed in 1765 that is to say twenty four years before the Revolution. According to this law writer the rules to be observed on these matters were as folserved on these matters were as fol-

Douts de Justice — Somo of our contumer he sys, "estunate the value of justice harde, busse or mogeme at a tenth of the revenues of the land. At that time the seig moral jurnishiction was considered of great importance. Edimé de Fre minville opines that at the present day the right of jurishiction ought not to be valued at more than a twentieth of the revenues of the land, and I consider this valuation still too large.

Droits Honorifiques — However mestimable these rights may be considered, declares our author, a man of a practical turn of mind- and not ceally led away by appearances 'it would be prudent on the part of those who make valuations to fix them at a very moderate price'.

Convies Segmentales—Our an thora, in group the rules for the estimation of the value of forced abour, poses that the right of enforcing it was still to be mit with sometimes. It values the dry's work of an ox at 20 sons and that of the labourer at 5 sons with his food. A tolerably good indication of the price of wages puid in 1765 may be gathered from Plages—Respecting the valuation of the tolls our author says "There is not one of the Seignorial rights that ought to 1e estimated lower than the tolls. They are very precarous. The repairs of the roads and bridges—the most useful to the commerce of the country—being now maintaine 1 by the King and the provinces many of the tolls become useless nowadays and they are sing pressed innover and more every day.

Drottde P.cheet de Chasse —The right of fishing may be farmed out, and may thus give occasion for valuation. The right of the chase is purely personal and cunnot be farmed out it may consequently be reckoned among the honorary rights but not among the profitable rights and cun not therefore be comprehended in any valuation.

Our author then mentions more controlled the rights of banalite, banum leyle and bluvre and thus proves that these rights were those most frequently exercised at that time and that they maintained the greatest importance. He adults

There is a quantity of other seg norial rights which may still be met with from time to time but which it would be too long and indeed impos sible to make mention of here. But intelligent appraisers will find sufficient rules, in the examples we have already given for the estimation of those rights of which we do not speak. I stimation du Cens —The greater number of the contumes place the estimation of the cens an denier 30 (3½ per cent) The high valuation of the cens arises from the fact that it represents at the same time all such resumerative casalities as the

lods et rentes for instance

Dimes infeo less — Terrage — The tithes in fief cannot be estimated at less than 4 per cent, this sort of property calling neither for care culture nor expense. When the lerrage or champar includes lods et centes that is to say, when the land subject to these does cannot be sold without paying for the right of exchange to the Scipneur, who has the right of tenure in capite, the valuation must be raised to 3½ per cent, if not it must be estimated like the tithes

Les Rentes fonctères, which pro duced no lods et centes or droit de retenu (that is to say which are not seignorial revenue) ought to be esti mated at 5 per cent

MR MURRAY'S GENERAL LIST OF WORKS.

ALBERT MEMORIAL A Descriptive and Illustrated Account of the National Monament at Kensington. Illustrated by nu nerous Engravings. With Descriptive Text. By Dorse C. Bett. With 24 Plates, Folio. 13.12.

HANDROOK TO. Post Svo. 1s.; or Illustrated Editio, 2s. 64

ABBOTT (Rev. J.). Memours of a Church of England Missionary in the North American Colonies. Post Svo. 2s.

ABERCROMBIE (Joun). Enquiries concerning the Intellectual Powers and the Investigation of Truth. Fesp. 8vo. 3s. 6st. ACLAND (Ray. C.). The Manners and Customs of India. Post

ASOP'S FABLES. A New Version. By Rev. Thomas James.
With 100 Woodents, by Transes and Wolfe, Post Sec. 22, 64.

With 100 Woodents, by Travitate and Wolfe. Post Svo 21, 6d.
AGRICULTURAL (ROTAL) JOURNAL. (Published half-yearly.)
AINGER (A. C.). [See Eros.]

ALICE (PRISONS): ORAND DUCHESS OF HESSE. Letters to M.M. Tax Gerre. With a Memoir by H R H Princes Christian Popular Edition Perinat. Grown Ser. 78 & or Original Edition, 121.

AMBER-WITCH (True). A most interesting Trial for Witchcraft, Translated by Lion Dury Gonous. Fost Ser. 20.

AMERICA. [See Bates, Nadatleac, Runbold.]

APOCRYPHA: With a Commentary Explanatory and Critical By Prof. Science, D.D., Prof. Fuler, Archesson Ferrar, Archescon Glifad, Canon Reyllagon, Dr., Lefrnikein, Rev., J. H. Lojned by Herric View, P. J. H. Lojned by Herric View, D.D. Evel, Malinu Prof. ARISTOTLE, [See Geory]

ARTHUR'S (LITTLE) History of England. By Liant Callcorn.

New Elinon, continued to 1812. With Woodcuts. Fear, Sto. 1s 6d.

History of France, from the Earliest Times to the History of France, from the Evrilest Times to the Fall of the Second Empte, with Twodens, Fep Stor. 2s. 5.

AUSTIN Jamps. Greens. Louistaness, of The Philosophys of Faither Lev. Edited by Rosers Carette. 2 Vot. 8 vo. 22.

Storman's Entroy, compiled from the above work, by Boart Carette. 19 vot. 8.

Analysis of By Goanov Carrett. Post 870. 62.

BABER (E. C.) Travels in W. China, Maps. Royal 870. 5s.

BAINES (Physics). Greenhouse and Store Plants. Flower-

ES (Filmss). Greenhouse and Stove Plants, Flowering and Fine leaved, Pains, Ferns, and Lycopoliums, With full details of the Propagation and Cultivation. Sec. 5: 64. BARCI AY (BISHOP) Extracts from the Talmud, illustrating the Teaching of the Bible With an Introduction 8vo 14s

BARKLEY (H C) Five Years among the Bulgarians and Turks

between the Danube and the Black Sea. Post Svo 10s 6J

Bulgaria Before the War Post Svo 10s 6d

My Boyhood a True Story Woodcuts Post

BARROW (John) Life of Sir F Drake Post Syo 2s

BATES (H W) Records of a Naturalist on the Amazons during Eleven Years Adventure and Travel Illustrations Post 8vo 7s 6d

BAX (CAFT) Russian Tartary, Eastern Siberia China Japan, &c Illustrations Crown Svo 12s

BEACONSFIFLDS (Lorp) Letters and Correspondence with his Sister * 1830—1830 A New Ldition with additional letters and notes. Portrait. Comm 870 2* _ A few copies of the larger editions may still be had

BECKETT (Str. EDMUND) "Should the Revised New Testa ment be Authorised? Politics 68.

BELL (Sir Chas) Familiar Letters. Portrait. Post 8vo 12s

(Dorns C) Notices of the Historic Persons buried in the Charel of 5t. Peter ad Vincula, in the Tower of London. Illus trations Crown Svo 14s

BENJAMIN (S G W) Persia and the Persians With Illus trations Svo 74s

BENSON (Archeisnor) The Cathedral its necessary place in the Life and Work of the Church Post See See amiration of Recent Charges in the P oduction and Distribution of Weall in the Unied hingdom and of the Effect of our actional Trade Poley on the General Welfare of the Nation C own 8to G

BERTRAM (Jas C) Harvest of the Sca an Account of British Food Fishes Fisheries and Fisher Folk Hibstrations Fost 8v 9v
BIBLE COMMENTARY THE OLD TESTAMENT EXPLANATORY

and Chitrical With a Ray 3 ox of the Translat ox By RISHOPS and CLERRY of the AMRILICAN CHURC, HE field by F C Coox MA, Canon of Exeter 6 Vota Medium 870 of 150 Vot I Gertain Deutranosom Vot IV Jon-Some or Solomon

Vol. IV JOR-ZONG OF SOLOKOR
Vols. II JOSHUA-ESTHER, Vol. V 202 IRAIAH JEREMIAH.
Vol. V 203 IRAIAH JEREMIAH.

THE LEW TESTAMENT 4 VOLS. Medium 8vo. 4/ 14s

Vol. 1 (INTERDUCTION ST MAT | Vol. 111 | ROMANS—PRILEM ST MARK ST | 28s

to the local State of the Apostuse Ss lumbers - Refer and State of the Apostuse Ss lumbers - Refer and Apostuse Ss lumbers - R

THE STUDENTS EDITION Abridge I and Filled by I agresson I M FULLER M A Crown Sec 72 fd. each 1cl me THE ULF TRYTAINER 4 IN THE NEW TERRERER 7 to 8

BIGO WITHLR (T P) Pioneering in South Brazil Three Years of Forest and Fractic Life in the Province of Parana. Map and Illustrations 2 vols Crean 800 21st

BIRD (I-ARELLA) Hawa ian Archip lago or Six Months amone the Palm Groves, Coral Reefs and No cances of the Sandwich Islands. Lastrations Crown Sec. 7s 64.

A Lady a Lafe in the Rocky Mountains. Illustrations Post Sva. 4 6d.

- The Golden Chersonese and the Way Thither Illustra-

- Unbea en Tracks in Japan Including Visits to the Abbrighes of Yezy and the Chines of Yikko and Isé. Illustrations. Crown Syn. s. &L.

BISSET (SIR JOHN) Sport and War in South Africa from 1834 to BLACKIE (C.) A D ctionary of Place Names B. ng a New Earthon I Georgia and Etymology Third Et Jon. Crown vo. Is.

BLU\T (Laby Arre) The Bedouins of the Esphrates Valley
W h sems account of the Arabs and theil Herres. Historians
1 tol. Crown for 2

A Pletimage to \egid the Cradit of the Arab lace and a Visit to the Arab Entry Illustrations. 2 Vols. Post For. *4.

BLUAT (Ray J J) Undesigned Coincidences in the Writings of the Old and New Testa .. eurs an Argument of their Verseity Post See Se - History of the Christian Church in the First Three

BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. Illustrated with Coloured

B.rders, Initial Letters, and Woodcuts. Bro. 18a. BORROW (Grorge) The Bible in Spain or the Journeys and Improvements of an Englishman in an at empt to circula e the Scrip-The Z neall. An Account of the G pe es of Spain Their Manners, Contons Religion, and Language. Post Sec. 2: 64.

--- Lavengro, The Scholar-The Gypsy-and the Priest.

- Romany Rye. A Caquel to Lavengro. Port 8vo. 5s.

WILD Wales its Peop . Language, and Cornery Post Svo. Sr. - Romano Lavo-Lil Word Book of the Romany w th

ROMAND LAYOLIN WORD BOOK Of the ROMANY WIN line side of the En_{such} Grysses Leaf Fevryand Habitators, Footbro Lat. BOSWELLES Life of Samuel Johnson LLD Including the Tour to the Relation, Kalled by Mr. Caoxes. Sereal Edinos, Fortunest, 1 vol. Machine See. 1

BOWEN (Loss Justice) Yugul in English Verse Eclogues and Enedd, Books I -- VI M p and Frontlepiece. Crewn via 1.1.

BRADLEY (DEAN) Arthur Penthyn Stanley Borraph cal Lectures. Crown 8vo 3s. 6f

BREWER CLEW J S) The Be gn of Henry VIII. from his Accession till the Death f Welser Reviewed and Illustrated from Original Documents. Ed ed by Jazza Garmants, of the Eccurd Office With Ferris 2 relate, sen. 30.

- The E..dowments and Establishment of the Church of England. There Edison. Foreign and E. ted by Liwis T. Digate M.A. Eartister at Law Post Svo. &.

BRIDGES (Mas F D) A Lady's Travels in Japan Thibet, Is kand hashmir Java t e Straits of Malarca, Vancouver's laland de With Map and Ilius rations from Sketches by the Author Crown See 15:

BRITISH ASSOCIATION RELOPTS 8vo

"." It a Peports for the years 1831 to 18 5 may he ob sined at the Offices of the British Associa jon.

Giascow, 18 6 25c of the Intrinsic association.

Lymo of 1817, 24c | 180 | 1879 of 1872, 24c | 1879 of 1879, 24c | 1879 of 1879 of

BRUCE (Hon. W A) Lafe of Sir Charles Napier [See Napier.] (PROFESSOR) A History of Egypt under the BRUGSCL

Pharmola Derived entirely from Monuments with a Memoir on the Exodus of the 1s sellies Maps, 2 Vols, 8vo 3°s

[See Barrer Huny Mixenin] BULGARIA BUNBURY (E. H) A History of Ancient Geography, among the

Orecks and Romans from the Earl est Ages till the Fall of the Roman Lupire Maps 2 tols Bro 21s BUPBIDGE (F W) The Gardens of the Sun or A Asturalists Journal in Borneo and the Salu Archipelage, 18 intrations Cr See 144.

BURCLHARDT'S Cicerone or Art Guide to Painting in Italy

New Ed then, revised by J A Crown Post for 6s BURGES (Sir James Bland Barr) Selections from his Letters and Papers as Under-Sec etary of 18s o for Forsign Affairs with betters of his Life. Belted by James Horrors 8vo 18s.

BURGON (J W) DEAR OF CHICHESTER, The Revised

(1) The New Greek Text (2) The New Fig sh Version (2) West cott and Horts Text at Theory Second Edition. See Id.
Twelve L yes of Good Men Martin J Pouth High James Resc Chas Marriott, Edward Hawkins Samuel Wil-briore Richa d Lyn i Cotton Ri hard Gresswel Henry O tavins Care Henry Longueville Ma sel Wm Jacobson, Chas. Page Lden Chas. Longuet II agin. 2 vols. Crown Svo

BURKE (LDMUND) | See PARRIURST]

BURN (Col.) Dictionary of Naval and Military Technical Terms hogilah and French-French and English Crown 890, 15s D ctionary of Naval and Military Technical BUTTMANN'S LEXILOGUS a Critical Examination of the Meaning of n marons Greek Words chiefly in Homer and Hesiod. By Rev J R. F SELLER. Svo 12s

BUXTON (CHARLES) Memoirs of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, Bart Portrait Svo 16s Popula Ed was, Frap Svo, 5s - Notes of Thought With a B ograph cal hotice by Rev J Liewelly Davies M A Second Ed son. Post Sto. 50 - (STDVET C) A Handbook to the Pol tical Questions of the Day; with the Arguments on Either S de Six h Edition.

- Finance and Politics an Historical Study Svo Ha the Ports.

BYLES (See Jours) Foundations of Religion in the Mind and Heart of Man Post See Co BYRON S (LORD) LIPE AND HORKS -

LIFE LETTERS AND JOURNALS. By THOMAS MOORE. Culinet Li des Plates. 6 Vols Frap 8vo 18s or One Volume, Portraite-

BYRON'S (Lord) LITE AND WORKS-continual.

LIFE AND FORTICAL WORSE. Popular Edition. Portraits.
2 Vell. Roysisca. 18.
POPULAL WORSE, EPPURP Edition. Portrait. 6 Vols. Sto. 45.
POPULAL WORSE, The Edition. Pilate, 10 Vols. 12ma. 30s.
PORTICAL WORSE, Podde El. 8 Vols. 16mo. In Rease. 21s.
PORTICAL WORSE, Product Edition. Pilate, Roysisto, 75. 64.
PORTICAL WORSE, Popular Edition. Pilates. Roysisto, 75. 64.

Portical Wones. Pearl Edition. Crown 810. 2s. 6d. Sewed Circh. 3. 6d

CHILDE Handen, With 80 Engravings. Crown 810. 124.

CHILDE HAROLD, 16mo. 2s. 6d. CHILDE HAROLD, Vignettes, 16mo. 1s.

CHILDE HAROLD, Vignettes, 10mo, 12.

Tales and Poems, 16mo. 2s. 6d.

MISCRILANEOUS. 2 Vols. 16mo. 5s.

DRAMAS AND PLAYS, 2 Vols, 16mo. 54. Don Jean and Berro. 2 Vols, 16mo. 54.

BEAUTIES. Poetry and Prose. Portrait. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

CAMPBELL (Load), Life: with his Autobiography, selections from Journals, and Correspondence, By Mrs. Berscastle. Portrait. - 2 Vols, 6vc. 32.

ceal of England. From the Earliest Times to the Death of Lord Eldon in 1833. 10 Vols. Crown 570. 6. each.

Chief Justices of England, From the Norman Conquest to the Death of Lord Teuterien, 4 Vols. Crown 8vo. &c. each.

(Thos.) Essay on English Poetry, With Short Lives of the British Poets, Post 8vo. 8s. &c.

CAREY (Life of), [See Gronge Smith.]

CARLISLE (BISHOP OF). Walks in the Regions of Science and Faith-a Zeries of Essays. Crown Bro. 7s. 6d.

CARNARYON (Loan). Portugal, Gallicia, and the Basque

Provinces. Post 8vo. 3s. 64. CARNOTA (CONDE DA). The Life and Eventful Career of F.M. the

Duke of Saidanha; Soldier and Statesman. 2 Vols. Svo. 32. CARTWRIGHT (W. C.). The Jesuits: their Constitution and Teaching. An Historical Sketch. 8vo. 9a.

CAVALCASELLE'S WORKS, [See CROWR.]

CESNOLA (GER.). Cyprus; its Ancient Cities, Tombs, and Temples. With 400 Hustrations. Medium 8vo. 50s.

CHAMBERS (G. F.). A Practical and Conversational Pocket Dictionary of the English, French, and German Languages. Designed for Travellers and Students generally. Small 576. 6c.

CHILD-CHAPLIN (Dr.). Benedicite; or, Song of the Three Children; being illustrations of the Power, Beneficence, and Design manifested by the Creator in his Works, Post Sw. 6s.

CHISHOLM (Mrs.). Perils of the Polar Seas; True Stories of Arcite Discovery and Adventure. Illustrations, PostSvo. 6s. CHURTON (ARCHEMACON). Poetical Remains. Post Svo. 7s. 6d.

CLASSIC PREACHERS OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH. Lectures delivered at St. James' 2 Vols. Post 8vo 7a 6d cach. CLIVES (LOED) Lafe. By Ray, G R. GLEIG Post 8vo Se 6d.

CLODE (C M) Military Forces of the Crown . their Administra tion and Covernment, 2 Vots 8vo 21s tach

CLODE (CM) Administration of Justice under Military and Martial Law as applicable to the Army havy and Auxiliary Porces. Byo 12s COLEBROOKE (SIR EDWARD, BART) Life of the Hon Mount-

at part Link instance With Portrait and Plans 2 Lots See 25. COLURIDGE (SAMUEL TAYLOR), and the English Romantic School

By Prof Alois Brandt, of Irigue An English Edition by Lady FASTLARY assisted by the Author With Portrait Crown Svo. 12s Table-Talk, Portrait 12mo Ss 6d

COLES (Jons). Summer Travelling in Iceland With a Chapter on Askia Dr E D Mongay Man and Ithustrations 18s COLLINS (J CHURTOR) BOLINGBROKE an Historical Study

Three Essays to which is added an Essay on Voltaire in England. Crown 870 71 64 COLONIAL LIBRARY. [See Home and Colonial Library]

COOK (Canon F C) The Revised Version of the Three First Gespels considered in its Bearings upon the Record of Our Lords Words and incidents in Its Life. For 98

- The Origins of I anguage and Religion. Considered in Five Casava. Sve 154

COOKE (b W) Leaves from my Sketch Book, With Descriptive Text. 50 Plates 2 Vols Small folio 21s 64, each - (W H) Collections towards the History and Anti-quities of the County of Hereford Vol. III in continuation of Duocumbs History Hingitations 4to 22128 54.

COOKERY (Mopras Dourstio) Adopted for Private Families

Re a Ledy Woolcus Feap Svo Ss

COURTHOPL (W J) The Liberal Movement in English

Literature A Series of Essays Post Svo Ss

CRABBE (Rev. G) Life & Works, Illustrations Reval Sec. 7s.

CRAIL (HERRY) Life of Jonathan Swift Portrait, Sec. 18s.

CRIPPS (WILTED) Old English Plate Ecclesiastical, Decorative. and Debratic its Makers and Marks. New Edition. Wil tions and 2010 facely its Plate Marks. Madi on 870 "Pr "." Tables of the Date Letters and Marks sold separately With Illustra

Old French Plate, With Paris Date Letters, and Other Marks, With Illustrations, Sec. Se 64. CPOLER (Rr Hox J W)

Correspondence and Diaries. comprising Lei ere, Hemoranda and Journale relating to the chief la lited and Social I vents of the first balf of the present Cautry Lit teld by Lorte J January M. With Lotted Late, See Cautry Lit of the Lorte J. Sanyana M. With Lotted L. Stelk, See Stell See - Progressive Geography for Children 15mo, 1s 6d.

Boswell's Life of Johnson [Se Bosmers.] - Historical Essay on the Guillotine. Fcap Sto. 1s.

CHOWE AND CAVALCASPILE. Lives of the Early Flemish Palaters Westrota, Port 8vo 71 Ed ; or Large Paper 8vo 13 at 11 listory of Painting in North Italy, from 14th to 18th Destroy With Il sutrations, 2 Vols. 8va. 42s. CROWE AND CAVALCASELLE-continued

Life and Times of Titian, with some Account of his sanity chiefly from new and unpublished records With Portrait and Mactritions, 27 July 870 214

Raphael, His Life and Works, with Particular Reference to recently discovered Records, and an enhantive Study of Extant Dranings and Pictures, 2 Vols. Sto 337
CUMMING (R. Gornos) Fire Years of a Hunter's Lafe in the

CUMMING (R. Gordon) Five Years of a Hunter's Lafe Far laterier of South Africa, Woodcuts Post 870 for

Far laterior of South Africa. Woodcals Post Svo &s CURRIE (C L.) An Argument for the Divinity of Jesus Christ Translated from the French of the Assa Ex Bornand Post Svo. &r

CURTIUS (PROFESSOR) Students Greek Grammar, for the Upper Forms Edited by Dr. W. Smith. Post 8vo. 6s

Elucidations of the above Grammar Translated by EVELYM AFROT Post Syo 74.64.
Smaller, Greek Grammar for the Middle and Lower

Forms. Abridged from the larger work. 12mo St. 6d.

Accidence of the Greek Language Extracted from the above work. 12ma. 2s 6s

— Principles of Greek Etymology Translated by A. 8

Winking and E. B. Evolum New Edition. 2 Vols. Sec. %s.

The Greek Verb, its Structure and Development, Translated by A. S. Wirkers, and E. B. Exclusy See 12:
CURZON (Hay Engage 1) July to the Monategrap of the Levant.

CURZON (How ROBERT) Visits to the Monasteries of the Levant, Illustrations, Post Sec 7s 6d CUST (CEREAL) Warriors of the 17th Century—Civil Wars of France and England. 2 Vols. 16s. Commanders of Fleets and Armles

2 Vols. 15s. Annals of the Ware—18th & 19th Century

With Maps. 9 Vols. Post 8vo 5; each.

DARWIN (CHARLES) Life and Letters, with an autobiographical
Chapter Edie of by his Son Francis Danwis F.R.S. With Portraits and Rootenta. 3 Vols 7v. 35s

DABWIN'S (CHARLES) WOPKS .—New and Cheaper Editions.

JOURNAL OF A NATURALIST DURING A VOYAGE ROUND THE WORLD Crown No To 64 ORIGIN OF SPECIES BY MEANS OF NATURAL SELECTION, OF the Preservation of Payound Races in the Struggle for Life. Woodcuts

Library Ed tion 2 vols. Crown 8vo 1.1 or popular Edition, Crown 8vo. 62.

Discuss or May and Spirection in Relation to Sex Woodcute Library Liliton 2 vols. Crown 8vo 151 or popular

Woodcuta Library Liliton 2 vols, Crown 8vo 15s or popular Edition, Crown 8vo 7s 6d

Variation of Annais and Plants under Donestication Woodcuta 2 Vols, Crown 8vo. 15s

EXPRINIOUS OF THE ENOTIONS IN MAN AND ANTHRER With Illustrations Crows 870. [In prepared on Various Conventions of White Opening Conventions]

VARIOUS CONTRIVANCES BY WHICH ORCHIDS ARE PERTILIZED BY ISSUET, Woodents Crown Sto. " 6.1.
MOVEMENTS AND HARITS OF CLIMBING PLANTS. Woodents Cown Sto. 62.

INSECTIFORMYS PLANTA WOODERS. Crown Sto On Layrects of Caoss and Sale Francislation in the Vegetable

A MODOR Crown Sec. 9s.
DIFFERENT PORMS OF PLOWERS ON PLANTS OF THE SAME APPLICAS. Crown Sec. 7: 6d.

DARWIN-co t ed

POWER OF MOVEMENT IN PLANTS. Woodcuts Cr Svo

THE PORMATION OF A POLITABLE MOULD THROUGH THY ACTION OF W and Will Ill atta long Post Bro Ge

LITE OF J BASHLE DARWIN With a Str ly of lis Works by Charac has an loricall howeld on troungro 74 Ed

PACTS AND SECUMENTS FOR DARWIN BY FRITZ MULLER Translated by W S Dallan Woodcuts Post Byo Co DATY (Siz Humpher) Consolations in Travel, or, Last Days of a 111 osopher Woodcuts Feap 8vo 3s 6d

- Salmonia or, Days of Fly hisbing Woodcuts. Fran Sen Se 64.

DE COSSON (MAJOR F A) The Cradle of the Diac Nile a Journey 1 rough Abyaninia and Bondan Map and Illus rations "Not Post Bro 214"

- Days an I Nights of Service with S r Gerald Grabam s Field ! re at Sunkim Plan and Illustrations Crown 8vo 14s.

DENNIS (Gronge) Tile Cities and Cemeteries of Litruria

20 Plan and 200 Hustra io 4 2 Vols. Mel um 8vo 21s
— (I curren) Industrial Ireland Suggestions for a Practical Policy of Irelant for the Irish Crown 8vo. 6s

DERBY (Lant or) It ad of Homer rendered into Luglish Black Verse. With Por ral 2 Vols Post Svo 10s

DERRY (Bisnor or) Vilness of the Pealms to Christ and Christianity The Bampton Lectures f r 1876. Sec. 14: DICEL (Prov. A. V.) Englands Case against Home Rule Third Ldttion. Crown Svo. s.f.!

- Why England Maintain the Union A nonular rendering of the above By C. L. S. Foun. Sec. Is DOG BREAKING [See HUTCHINGS]

DRAKE'S (Sie Francis) Life Voyages and Exploits, by Sea and Land By Jone Barrow Post Svo. 2s.

DRINKWATER (John) History of the Siege of Gibraltar, 1779-1783 With a Description of that Garrison Post Svo 2s

DU CHAILLU (PACE A) Land of the Midnight Son Illus 1-lone 2 The Vikin Age. The Early History Manners and Cu town of the Action Control of the Control of the Midnight Son Illus taken from a ray 1 ws 1 wel 100 mm of catrice, and bogs, as well a from them are referenced Addiss 2 Vola Medium for W. b 1 2 O

I lust at ons DUPFERIN (Long) Letters from High Latitudes a Yacht Voy age to Iceland, Jan Mayen, and Spitzbergen. Woodcuts Post Svo 7s 6d ---- Speeches and Addresses Pol t cal and Laterary, delivered in the House of Lords in Canada, and chewhere. Sec. 17:5

DUNCAN (Con.) History of the Royal Artillery Com
pled from he Original Records Fortrat 2 Vols 870 185

- Fngl b in Spain or The Story of the War of Suc DURER (ALBERT) his life as I Work By DR THAUSING

IR (ALBERT) DIS THE RUL WORK DY DE THANGERO T am sted from t German Edi d by F A Extor M A With lore a tand libustrations 2 Vols Medium 870 42s, EASTLAKE (Sin C) Contributions to the Literature of the Fine Arts With Memoir by Laby EastLand 2 Yols, See "te

PUBLISHED BY MR MURRAY EDWARDS (W H) loyage up the River Amazon, including a Visit to Para Post Svo. 2r ELDON'S (Loap) Public and Private I ife with Belections from his Diaries &c. By Honaca Twees Tortrait. 2 Tols. Post Bro. 21s ELGIV (LORD) Letters and Journals Edited by Walkonn, With Prefera by D an Stanley Evo 14. Edited by THEODORE Two Sieres of Vienna by the Turks, ELLESMER! (Loan) Translated from the German Post See 2r ELLIS (W) Madagascar Revisited The Persecutions and Herote Sufferings of the Native Christians. His strations. Svo. 15s.
— Memoir By His Son I ortrait. 8vo 10s 61 - (Rominson) Poems and Fragments of Catulius, 16mo 5s ELPHINSTONE (How M) H story of India-the Hin loo and Mahammedan Periods, Fd ted by Panyasson Cowatt. Map 4vo 18s - The I so of the British I ower in the East A Cont nua 1 nof h a Hi t ry of India in the Hindoo and Mahammedan Periods Ed ted by Sin L. Co Engoyne Bart W h Maps 6vo 16t. --- I ife of [See COLEBROOKE.]
--- (H W) Patterns and Instruct one for Orna mental Ture mg Wi h To Hustra ions. Small sto 13s.
ELTON (CAPT) and H B COTTFRILL Adventures and Discoveries among the Lekes and Vountains of Eastern and Cen ral Africa. Wi h Map and Il ustra lons 870, 21s ENGLAND [See ARTHUR-BREWEE-CROKER-HURE-MARKHAN -SHITH-and STARHOPE.] ESSAYS ON CATHLDRALS. Edited, with an Introduction

By DEAN HOWEVER See 12:
ETOY LATTY GRAMM'S Pert 1—Elementary For use in the Lower forms Compiled with the sanction of the Headmarter by A C Alwars M and H G Wisyrin, MA. Crown Sto Se 6d - THE PREPARATORY ETON GRAMMAR, Abridged from the above We k. By he same Ed os Crown Svo. 22.

FIRST LATIN LARCISE BOOK, adap ed to the Latin Grammar By the same Editors Crown Svo. 81

- LATIN GRAMMAR. Part II For me in the Fifth Form By banc a Hay P withe M A and W at am Ratpulyor M A Fellows of h ng's C Rege Cambridge and Ass stant Mas creat Eton Cillege Crown 840 [In the Press - FOULTH FORM OVID Selections from Ord and Tibulins Wilh to sa by H G Wrytz. Post Syn 2r 6d - HORACL. Part I The Odes Epodes and Carmen Spen

I m. With Notes By I W tograss M.A. Mapa trwatyo - EXERCISES IN ALGEBRA by E P Rouse M. 1 and ARTHUR COCK MT M.A Crown See Sc. - EXERCISES IN ARITHMETIC. By REY T DALLES

MA Cown Sto 2.
FELTOE (Rev J Larr) Memorials of John Plint South twice

President of the Royal Col ege of Sargeons. Portrai Crown 6vo 74 8d FERGUSSON (James) History of Architecture in all Countries from the Earl est T mes Wi h I 600 I ustrations 4 Vols. Medium Svo Yols J & H Anc ent and Medieval 63.

III Indian & Eastern 42s. IV Modern, 31s 6d FITZGERALD (B shop) Lectures on Eccles ast cal History including the origin and progress of the English 1 of runs ion from Widing to the Great Rebellion. Wi halfemoir 2 less Swa. 21 PITZPATRICK (William J) The Correspondence [of [Daniel O Connell the Liberator Now first published, with a Momotr and Notes, With a Portrait 2 Vols 500

FLEMING (PROFESSOR) Student's Manual of Moral Philosophy, With Quotations and References. Fost 8vo 74 64

FLOWER GARDEN. By REY. THOS JAMES. FCED 870 Is

TORBES (CAPT) British Burma and its People: Native Manners Customs and Peligion Crown Svo 10s 6d.

FORD (RICHARD) Gatherings from Spain. Post 8vo. 2s 6d. FORSYTH (William) Hortensius, an Historical Essay on the Office and Dotles of an Advocate Illustrations 8vo 7s 6d [See ARTHUR-MARKHAM-SHITH-FRANCE (HISTORY OF) STUDESTS - TOCOURTILE.

FRENCH IN ALGIERS, The Soldier of the Foreign Legionand the Prisoners of Abd-el-Kadir Post 8vo 2/

FRERE (SIR BARTLE) Indian Missions Small Svo 2s 6d Missionary Labour in Eastern Africa. Crown 8vo. 5s

How it will be Met and How to Rengal Famine Prevent Future Famines in India With Maps Crown 8vo &s

Old Decean Days, or Hindoo Fairy Legends current in Southern India, with Introduction by Sir Bautes I sens. With 50 Illustrations Post Svo 72 65 GALTON (F) Art of Travel, or, Hints on the Shifts and Con trivances available in Wild Countries Woodcuts Post 8vo. 7s 64 GAMBIER PARRY (T) The Ministry of Fine Art to Happiness of Life Revised Dillion with an Index. 8vo 14s. The Ministry of Fine Art to the

GEOGRAPHY See BUNSURY-CROKER-RICHARDSOY-SMITH -STUDENTS'

GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIFTY'S JOURNAL (1846 to 1851)

MARIEMAN ANY LAST STATEMENT OF THE STATE

SIARCHAR WHEN DISHOPPARIES APPENDED BY SO ONE SIAPE Revision of Part of 1) of Had Country &c. By
I that J & Biolancer & Journey from Shirm to Janks,
By J R Parece. Poyal Sto "c. of
That it - Geographical Lidecation. By J & Kettie. Reyal

GEOP OE (Exaust) The Mosel, Twenty Etchings, Imperial to 42s

- Loire and South of France, Twenty Etchings Folio 42s OERMANY (HISTORY OF) | See MARRIAN]

GIBBON'S History of the Pecline and Pall of the Roman Empire Litted with notes by Milkar Grigor and Dr Wu Skrin Maps. B tols, 6vo Cis. Students Lalitton, 7s. Cl. (See Stroker &)

GIFFARD (EDWARD) Deeds of Naval Daring; or, Anecdotes of the British Navy Pear, St. 54, 54

GILBEPT (Josian) Land-cape in Art before the days of Claude and Salvator With 150 H natrations, Medium Sva. 30r

GILL (CAPE). The River of Golden Sand A. Journey through Clina to Burmah. Ed led by E. C. Barra. With Mixe a by Col Yur, CB for rait, Map. and Hustrations. Fost Svo. 7s 64.

- (Mrs.) Six Months in Ascension An Unscientific Account of a Scientific Expedition. Map Crown 8vo 9/

GLADSTOVE (W E.) Rome and the Newest Fashions in Rel gion Three Tructs 8vo. 7s 6s

Gleanings of Past Years 1843 78 7 Vols Small Sro 24 64 each 1 The Throne, the Prince Consort, the Cablant and Constitution 11 Pers and and Lersry 111 11 stor al and Speculative 14 Program, And My Eccles attick 1/1 Mised ascome

OLEIG (O R.) Campaigns of the British Army at Washington and New Orleans 1 ost 800. 2:

Story of the Battle of Waterloo Post 8vo 3s 6d

Story of the Battle of Waterloo Post 8vo 3s 64

Narrative of Sales Brigade in Affghanistan Post 8vo 2s

Lafe of Lord Clive. Post 8vo 3s 6d
Sir Thomas Munro. Post 8vo 3s 6?

GLYNNE (SIR STEPHEN) Notes on the Churches of Kent. With Preface by W H Gladstone MP Illustrations. 8vo 12;

GOLDSMITHS (OLIVER) Works. Edited with Notes by PETER CONSTROURS, Vignet es 4 Vols. Bro. 30s

GOMM (F M. Siz Wm) His Letters and Journals 1799 to 1915 Edited by F C Carr Gomm W h Portrait. 870 12s.

GORDON (SIR ALEX.) Sketches of German Life and Scenes from the War of Liberation. Post 8vo 3s &c. ———— (Lapy Dury) The Amber Witch Post 8vo 2s

The French in Algiera. Post 8vo 2

GRAMMARS [See CURTIUS - ETOY-HALL - HUTTON-KING EDWARD-LEATURE-MARTERRE-MATTERE-SMITE]

GRANVILLE (CHARLES) Sir Hectors Watch, 2s 6d. GREECE (HISTORY OF) [See GROTE—SKITE—STUDENTS]

GREY (Earl) Ireland the Cause of its Present Condition and the Measures proposed for its Improvement, Crown Sto. 34, 64

GROTES (GEORGE) WORLS -

History of Gerre From the Earlest Times to the close of the generation contemporary with the Dea h of Alexander the Great Chine El on. Fortra's and Plans. 12 Vols. Positive is each Plans and other Companions of Socrates. 3 Vols. 8vo 45¢ of a hew E. if n Ed to by Alexander Bass 4 Vols. Crown 8vo

PLATO and other Companions of Socrates, 3 Vols. 8vo 45s or a New E. it in Ed ted by ALEXANDER BAIN 4 Vols Crown 8vo 61 each (The Folumes may be had Separa 1).

ARISTOTIL. 8vo 12:
MINOR WORES. POTITAL. 8yo 14s.

MINOR WORKS. Portrait, 870 14s.
LETTERS ON SWITZERLAND IN 1847 6s.
Propagate Lang. Portrait 9no 12s.

PERSONAL LIVE. Portrait. 8vo 12s

GROTE (Mas.) A Sketch By Lady Eastlake. Crown 870 & GUILLEMAPD (F H) MD The Cruise of the Marchesa to Kamecha ka and New Guinea. With a votices of Formers and Lisk king and various its and S of the Midsy Arch poings W h ML ps and 150 I us rations 270.6 & 870 & 4.2

HALLS (T D) School Manual of Fuglish Grammar With Illus rations and Practical Exercises 12mo 3s.6d.

Primary English Grammar for Elementary Schools
With numerous Later see and gradus ed Parsing Lessons. 16mo 1s

Manual of English Composition With Cop our Illustra tions and Practical Later sees 12mo 2s ed.

- Chil is First Latin Book comprising a full Practice of Nouns Pronouns, and Adjectives with the Verbs 16mo 2s

HALLAMS (HENRY) WORKS -

THE CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF EXCLAND from the Accession of Henry the Seventh to the Death of George the Second Library Ed son 3 Vols For 30s Cabinet Ed ton 3 Vols Fost 8ro 12s Studes fid tom Post Stor Ta. Col.

History of Europe During the Middle Ages Library

Edica, 3 Vois Stor 305 Cobset Ed 100 3 Vois. Post Stor 155

Sudents Ed on Post Stor 7; 61

Literary History or Europe During the 15th, 16th and 17th Cartur as I bray Edition 3 Vols 8vo 88s Cubinet At Loss,

4 Vols. Post 8vo 16s

(Arthur) Literary Remains. in Verse and Prose

Portrait. Feap 8vo & 8d.

HAMILTON (ANDREW) Rhemsberg Memorials of Frederick the Great and Prince Henry of Prosels 2 Vois Crown 8vo 21s HAPT'S ARMY LIST (Published Quarterly and Annually)

HAY (Sin J H DEWHOOD) Western Barbary, its Wild Tribes and Savage Animals Post Svo 22

HAYWARD (A) Sketches of Eminent Statesmen and Writers,

The Art of Dining or Castronomy and Castronomers.

A Selection from the Correspondence of the late Abraham Hayward QC ed ted with an inticel cory account of Mr Hayward sharty Life. By H b Camera. 2 yes Crown 8vo "ir

HEAD'S (SIR FRANCIS) WORKS --THE ROYAL ENGINEER Blastrations, 8vo. 12s

Live of Sin John Bergother, Post 5vo 12 Rayin Journey across the Panyas, Post 5vo 22 Berbles from the Brunney Hustrations, Post 5vo 7s 61 Stories and Ponney of the Land h h R. Post 5vo 2s

HFBLRS (Bisner) Journals in India. 2 Vols. 1 ost 870. 70

I octical Works, Lottrait Peap Svo 2s 6 L HEFODOTUS A New Finglis! Version. Edite! with Notes and Laways by Caron Raw, 1800 h 51 Raw, 1850 and 8 x J G Will 2007 h 578 and Woodetts. 4 V s. 870 450.

HERPIES (IT How Jons) Memoir of his Public Life Ly his see I dward He ries C B. 2 Vols Srd. 24s.

HERSCHIII'S (CAROLINE) Memoir and Correspondence. By Mas Jour Hesschat, Wiblories L. Crowa Sea, 71 6d.

FORFIGN HAND BOOKS.

HAND BOOK-TRAVEL-TALK, English French, German, and Ital an. New and Roy sed El tion. 19mo 3s 84

DICTIONARY English French and G rman.

Containing all the words and idl madic phrases likely to be required by a traveller Bound in leathe 16mo, 6s.

- HOLLAND AND BELGIUM, Map and Plans, 6s -NORTH GERMANY and THE PHINE .-The Black Forest, the Hartz, Thurnogerwald Saxon Switzerland, Püren, the G ant Mountains Tannus, Odenwald blesss and Loth ringen. Map and Plans. Post 87c. 103.

- SOUTH GERMANY -- Wurtemburg, Bayaria,

Austria, Styria, Salzburg the Alps, Tyrol, Hungary and the Danube, from Ulm to the Black Sea. Maps and Plans Post Svo 10s - SWITZERLAND, Alps of Savoy, and Piedment,

In Two Parts. Maos and Plans Post Svo 10s -FRANCE Part L. Normandy Brittany, the French Alps, the Loire, Seine, Garonne, and Pyrenees. Maps and Plans. 10 64

-FRANCE, Part II Central France, Auvergne the TRANCE, PART II. CENTRI TRANCE, AUCEGNE LID CEVENDES, BURGHOS HE Rhone and Saone, Professee, Nimes, Arles, Marsell et, the French Alps, Alsace, Lorraine, Champagne, &c. Maps and Plans. Post Svo. 7: 64.

— WEDITERPANEAN— its Principal Islands

Cl es, Scaports, Harbours, and Border Lands. For Travellers and hathtsmen, wi h nearly 50 Maps and Plans Post 8ro 20s

ALGERIA AND TUNIS Algiers, Constantine, Oren the Atlas Range. Maps and Plans. Post 6vo. 10a

- PARIS, and Environs, Maps and Plans, 2s 6d - SPAIN Madrid, The Castiles The Basque Provinces.

Leon The Asturias Galleis, Estremadura, Andalusia, Ron! Granada Murria, Valencia, Catalonia, Aragon, Navarre The Balcoric Islands, &c &c. Mare and Plans, Post Svo

---- IOPTUGAL, Lisson Operio, Cintra, Mafra Madeira, the Agorea, and the Canury Islands, &c. Map and Plan. Post Bro. 1 s

NORTH ITALY, Turin, Milau Cremons, the In an Lake, Berguno, Breeds, Verons, Manima, Vicessa, Padus, Lerrars, Bologos, Ravenos, Richini Piscensa, Genos the Riviers, Venice Farme, Modeos, and Romagns. Maps and Plans Post Sv. 1

CFNTRALITALY Florence Luces, Tuscany The Marabes, Lmbria, Ac. Maps and Plana. Post five 10s.

- FOME AND ITS ENVIRONS. SO Maps and Plane. 10s - SOUTH ITALY Naples, Pompell, Herculaneum. and Vertice, Maps and Plane, Post Sto. 10s.

- NOI W 11 Christiania, Bergen, Trondhjem. The Fjelds and Fjords. Laps and Piens. Post 8vo. Rs.

SWEDEY Stockholm Upasla, Gothenburg, the DL MAPK Sleawig Holstein Copenhagen, Jut-

-RUSSIA ST PETERSPERS MOSCOW POLIND and FIGLAGE, Maye and Plane, Post Sec. 152.

- HAND BOOK—GREECE the Ionian Islands Athens the Pelopor nesus, the Is and of the Algent Ren, Albania, Thessaly Macedonis &c In Two Parts Maps Plans and ylews, Post Svo 213
- TURKEY IN ASIA—Constantingers the Bos
 phorus Dardanelles Bronsa Plain of Troy Crete Cyprus amyrna Epinesse the Seress Churches, Coasts of the Back Rea, Armena
 Eminister Valley Route to India &e Maps and Plans Pool 880 158
- EGYPT The Course of the Nile through Egypt and Nubla, Mexandria Cairo Thebes Suer Capal the Pyramida Singl the From &c Mars and Plans Post Byo 15
- HOLY LAND STRIA PALESTIRE Peninsula of Shal Edow Syrian Deserts Petra, Danuscus and Falmyra Maps and Pfans, Post 870 20;

* Map of Palestine. In a case 12s

- BOMBAY Poonah Beejapoor Kolapoor Goa Jubulpoor Indore Surat Baroda Ahmedabad Somnauth, kurrachee &c. Map and Plans. Post Styo 15s.
- MADRAS Trichinopoli Madura Tinnevelly Tuti torin Bauga ore Slysore The Allgiris Wynaad Octaramond Calleut Hyderabed Ajants Elura Caves &c. Haps and P acs Post 6vo 13s
- BENGAL Calcults Orissa British Burmah, Hangon Moulm in Mandelay Darjilion Daces Pa na Benares
 N W Provinces Although Campore Lucknow Agra, Gwallor Naini Tal Delhi &c Mapp sed Plans, Postro 202.
- THE PANJAB Amraoli, Indore Ajmir Jaypur, Rohtak, Saharany r Ambata, Lodiana, Labore K in, S mia, Salkot
 Penhawar Rawi Findi Attock, Karachi S bi &c., Maps 15s

ENGLISH HAND BOOKS.

- HAND-BOOK-ENGLAND AND WALES An Alphabetical Hand Book. Conden ed into One Volume for the Use of Travelle a With a Map Post 8 o
- LONDON Maps and Plans. 16mo 3s 6d
- ERVIRONS OF LONDON within a circuit of 20 miles. 2 Vols Crown Sec. 21s.

 ST PAULS OATHEDRAL. 20 Woodents, 10; 6d
- EASTERN COUNTIES Chelmsford Harwich Col chester Middon Cambridge Ly Nermarket, Lury St. Edmands Ipassic Woodbridge, Schizzbray Lovestoft, Norwich Larmouth Cromer &c. Map and Hun, Post Sto 13:
 - CATHEDI ALS of Oxford Poterborough, Norwich, Ely and L neofa. Wi h 80 Hustrat ons. Crown 8vo. 21s
- REYT Canterbury, Dover Ramsgate Sheerness,
 Rochester Canthen Woodwich Maps and Plana I and for 7s. 6d

 BUSSLX Brighton Chichester World jug Haatings Laws, Armed & E. Hays and Plana I rest by. 6s.
 - SURREY AND HANTS hingston Croylon 1 cl gata, Childred Post ag W nobas or Fon hang on Kew Jores formands fairs or Wusar & a present lane, Post 870.

- HAND EOOK-BIRKS, BUCKS AND OXON, Windsor, Eton Reading Aylesbury Urbridge Wycombe Henley Oxford Blenhelm the Thames &c Map and Hans Post870 Pr
- WILTS DORSFT, AND SOMERSET, Salisbury Chippenham Weymouth Si erborne Wells Bath Bristol Tannion, &c Map Post 870 125
- DFY ON, Exeter, Ilfracombe Linton, Sidmouth, Dawlish Telegramouth Lymouth Developert, Terquay Haps and Plans
 Footbro 7, 86
- CORNWALL Launceston Penzance, Falmouth
- CATHEDP LLS of Winchester Salisbury, Fxeter Wells Chichester Rochester Canterb vy and 44 Albane, Wilh 130 Illustrations " viols Crown Bro 350 Bt. Albane separately C
- CIPECESTER HEPEFOPD 42D WORCESTEP
 Cirencester Cheltenham Stroud Towkesh ry Leondoster Ross, Malvern, Kiddermi ster Dad ey Eresham, &c. Map. Post 870 E9
 - CATHEDPALS of Br stol Gloucester Hereford, Wercester and Lichfield With 50 Hinstra lons Crown 8ro 15s
 - NORTH WALES Bangor Carastron Deaumaria
- Saowdon, Liamberts Dolgelty Conway &c Maps Post 8vo 7s

 SOUTH WALES Monmonth Liandaff Merthyr Valeof Seath Pembroke Carmarthen Tenby Swance, The Wye &c
- Map Fos Svo 1:

 CATHEDPALS OF BANGOR ST ASAPH
 Liandaff and St. David a. With Highrations Post Svo 15s.
- NORTHAMPTO\SHIFF A\D PUTL\NDNorthsupton, Pete borough Toécesier Daventry Ma kt Ha borough he ering Wel ngborough Thrayston, Stamford, Lpping ham Oakham Mays Postfor 7: 6d
 - Ma lock, Bakewell Chairvorth The Peak But on Hardwick Dove Dale Achdorne Southwell Mansfeld Retfort Burton Belvier Melton Mow bray Wolve hampton Lichfeld Washall Tamworth May Post Svo Or
 - SHTOPSHIRE AND CHESHIRF Shrewsbury I ud low Bindgao h Ovwestry Chestar Crews Alderley Stockport Birkenbead Mays and P and Post Svo. 6s
 - Liverpool, B aley Cil berow To ton, B achburne Wignu Pres on Each dale, Lancas er Son hort Blackpoo & Maya & Pinna, PostSw.7.7.64
 - YORKSHIRE Don aster Hull So by Beverley, Scarbore by Wh thy Harrigate P per Leeds Wat held Bradf rd Hallar Hudders in Shoul id, May and Plans, Post 8 o. 1
- CATHEDPALS of York P pon Durham Carlisle
 Chester and Mon bester Wi has libustrations 2 Vols Cr Sto. 21:
 DURHAM AND NODERITHINDED 12 72 2:
 - DURHAM AND NORTHUMBERLAND New cas le Da l agton % orthon Ha thepol Shields Berwick-on Tweed Morpeth Typemouth Coldstream Alan et, &c Map Poet Svo. 22.

HAND BOOK-SCOTLAND, Edinburgh, Melrose Kelso Glasgow, Bun fri s Ayr "Ulrilug Arran Tio Clyde Oban, Inversity, Loch Lonand Loch Kartine and Trossaci's Caledonian Land Inverness Letth, Dundee, Abordeen Breomar bkye Calithness, Ross Buther land &c Mars and lis a 1 mt bvo fa

IRELAND, Dublin, Belfast, the Giants Causeway Donegal Calway Wastord Cork Litherick Wastford Liflar ney, Bantry Glengarif & Maps and Plans 1 lost 870 103.

A Month in Norway Fcap 8vo HOLLWAY (J G)

HONEY BEF By REV THOMAS JAMES. Feap 8vo 1s - (THEODORE) Life By J G LOCKHART Fran Svo 1s.

HOOK (Dran) Church Dictionary A Manual of Reference Clergymen and Stidents how Edition there ghlyrevized I dited Walfen How, MA and WR W String, MA Med 8vo "18

HOPE (A J BERESFORD) Worship in the Church of Lugland. Svo De or Popular Schol out from Bvo 2s 6d

WORSHIP AND ORDER, SYO De

HOPE-SCOTT (James), Memoir [See Onvant] HORACL a New Ldition of the Text. Edited by Draw MILMAN

With 100 Woodents Crawn 8vo 7s 6d. - [See Eron]

The Pise and Growth of the Law of Nations as HOSACK (Jour) established by general usage and by treaties from the earliest times to the Treaty of Utrecht, Svo. 10,

HOUGHTON S (LORD) Monographs, Personal and Social. With Portraits Crown 8vo 10s 6d. POETICAL WORRS. Collected Edition With Portrait. 2 Vots Fcap 8vo. 12e

HOME AND COLONIAL LIBRARY A Series of Works adapted for all circles and classes of Readers having been selected for their acknowledged interest and ability of it a Authors Fost Svo. Published at 2s and 2s 6d each and arranged under two distinctive beads as follows -

CLASS A.

HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, AND HISTORIC TALES

1 SIEGE OF GIBRALTAR By 11 THE SIEGES OF VIENNA.
By LOND ELLZSWAN 24 JOHN DR NEWATER 24 THE AMBER WITCH Bv

12 THE WAYSIDE CROSS CROMWELL AND BUNYAN

13 SKFTCHLS OF GERMANLIFE By S & A GORDON S. S.L. 14 THE BATTI E OF WATERLOO By ROBERT SOUTHEY 24 4. LIFE OF SIR I RANCIS DRAKE

E. LIFE OF SIR FRANCIS DRABLE
BY JOUR BARROW 2*
5 CAMPAIGNS AT WASHING TON BY REY O R. GLE O 2*
5. THE FRENCH IN ALGIERS
BY LADY DOWN GOADOW 2*
THE FALL OF THE JESUITS Ry REY G R GLESS SE SL.
15 AUTORIOGRAPHY OF STEF-FENS 2.
16 THE BRITISH POETS. By

THOMAS CAMPBELL Se 64

B, LIVONIAN TATES 2: 9 LIFE OF CONDE, By LORD MA

TROMAS CARPSKL 25 63
TROMAS CARPSKL 25 63
THISTORICAL ESPAYS By LORD MARDI & 6.4 15. LIFE OF LURD CLIVE. By RAY G R GLE 5 25 64
19. NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY RYBREF B HEAD 25
20 LIPE OF MUNRO BYREY G
R GLEID & 6.64 10. SALES BRIGADE. By Res

G R GLE 0. 24

CT.ASS R

AND ADVENTURES VOYAGES TRAVELS

1 BIBLE IN SPAIN By GRUSON 15 LETTERS FROM MADRAS By BORROW Sa. 64. A Lapy 2s

2 GYPSIES OF SPAIN By GROBGE 16 HIGHLAND SPORTS Bongs w 3s Rd.

CHARLES ST JOHN 84 64 8&4. JOURNALS IN INDIA Be 17 PAMPAS JOURNEYS Bam P lissas. 2 V la Te F R HEAT 24

5 THAVELS IN THE HOLY LAND 18. GATHERINGS FROM SPAIN By Izer and Mayo Rt. 2: By R CHARD FORD 3r 64

6. MORUCCU AND THE MOORS 19 THE RIVER AMAZON BY W H FOWARDS 22 20 MANNERS & CUSTOMS OF Ry J Dauracan Hay 21

I LETTERS FROM TRE BALTIC INDIA BYREY C ACIAND 24

By A LADT 2: S. NI W SOUTH WALES By Mas "1 ADVENTURES IN MEXICO By G F RULTUS & 64 MERSDITH 24

9 THE WEST INDIES By M G 22 PORTLOAL AND GALICIA LEWIS. ZL. By LOAD CARMARYON Se 64.

10 SECTOBLES OF PERSIA By 23 BUSH LIFE IN AUSTRALIA BY REY H W HATGARTA 2L 24 THE LIBYAN DESERT BY 11 MEMUIKS OF PATHER RIPA

BATTE ST TORY 24 12 4 13, TYPEE AND OMOG Ex 25 BIERRA LEUNE. BY A LIDY HERMANN MELVILLE 2 Vols. To 21 64

IL MISTONARY LIFE IN CAN ADA. By Ray J Assort 2s .. Each work may be had separately

HUBVEP (Banow vos) A Voyage through the Briti h Empire South Afri a, 4 a ra la, New Z sland Th Ctrai s Settlemen s in a the South dea is and California Oregon Cauada &c Wi h a Map

the So th "ea is and a canterna, Orgon cannon as the many "bok. (Inwa Bro. 21s

HUHN (A Vov) The Struggle of the Bulgar ans for National Indoord not A lit tory of he war bowen B caris and Sertia in 183 under 1 a acc ALEXANDER. With Map Cros See 9;

HUME (The Students) A History of Eugland from the inva-

sio of Julius Caracto the Revolution of 1888. New El tion revised, corrected and contined to be Treaty of the units. By J. S. BREWER, M.A. Will I Lob uned Maps & 10 Wordente. Post 800 to 64 a. 4. Villamed Maps. Pr. 426.65 cach

HUNNEWELL (JANUS I) Englands Chron cle in Stone
De ved from i possal Ob eva a of the Gald dra Chron es Abbert M es teries Ca le enl Pelac a ne a n J un pe through thelp es all and With Ha rat ns, Median Sec 19

HUTCHINGON (Gaw) Dog Brenking with Odds and Linds for tiots who I with Dog and I of a Will 40 I us re one. Crown Evo. 1: 6d. "A Symmotry of the Rue si or Gamethe pres. I

HUTTON (Il E.) I meerpla t rees an Introduction to the Study remarkable bylandes jut a ann a f Fiande a w hade crip nof t a st wof Socs y nt ande a in he li h Ce nry Cr ava, 10a 66 HTWNOLOGY I ICTIONARY OF [See JULIAN]

ICHAAD [See Colus-Dufferin]
INDIA [See Firmintore - Hard-book - Shith - Tenfin - More and Links-Link]

INGE (Wm I ale) Society in Pome under the Cor are Cumatro fe. IPBY AND MANOIES Travels in Egypt Nubis, Syris, and the Holy Land For 8to 24 IREI AND [See GRET]

JAMES (F L) The Wild Tribes of the Soudan with an account of the route from Wady Halfah to Dungola and Berber With Chapter on the Contition of the Soudan by Siz S Baggs. Map and Illustratt us Crown 8vo 7s 6d

JAMESON (Mas) Lives of the Early Italian Paintersand the I regress of Painting in Italy-Cimabus to Bassane With 50 Portraits Post 8vo 12r

JAPAN. [See Bran-Mouver-Reed]

JENNINGS (Louis J), Rambles among the Hills in the Peak of Derbyshirs and on the South Downs With aketches of people by the way With 23 Illustrations Crown Svo 12s

- Field Paths and Green Lanes or Walks in Surrey and Sustex Popular Edition, With Hinstrations Crown 8vo 60 JERVIS (Ray W. H) The Galliesn Church, from the Concordst of Bologus, 1516 to the Revolution With an Introduction. Portraits 2 loss 670 28s

JESSE (EDWARD) Gleanings in Natural History Fcp 8vo Ss 6d

JOHNSON'S (Dr. SAMUEL) Lafe (See Boswell] A Dictionary of Hymnology. JULIAN (REV JOHN J)

Companion to Existing Hymn Books Setting forth the Origin and History of the Hymns contained in the I rincipal Hymnal, with botices of their Autrors Medium 870. JUNIUS' HARDWRITING Professionally investigated. Edited by the

Hon E. Twisteron With Facsimiles Woodcute &c. 4to ±334 The Consulting Architect Practical Notes on KERR (ROBT)

Administrative Difficulties Crown See Or. KING EDWARD VI-o's Latin Grammar 12mg 3s 6d.

- First Latin Book, 12me 2s 6d

KIRK (J FOSTER) History of Charles the Bold. Duke of Bur-Portrait: a Vols 8vo 45c

KIRKES Handbook of Physiology Edited by W. MORRANT BARRA and V D HARRIN Will 500 Illustrations Post Svo 14a KUGLERS HANDBOOK OF PAINTING -The Italian Schools.

A key Edition revi ed incorporat nother results of all the most recent discoveries. By Sir A. HERRY LATARD, With 200 Illustrations. 2 vols. - The German, Flewish, and

Datch Schools Revised By J A CROWS With 60 Illustrations. 2 Vols. Crown 8vo 21s

LANE (E. W) Account of the Manners and Customs of Modern Egyptians. With Hiestrations 2 Vols Post Sec. 12s Major Lawrence F L.S. a Novel

LAVILESS (Hor Earts) Major Lawrence Fig. a Novel LAVIARD (Sir A H) Ninerch and its Remains. With Illustrations of the Ninerch and Babylon Discoveree in the Rolley, will Teach to America Konderee & In State of the Ninerch and Embylon Discoveree in the Rolley. Early Adventures in Persia, Babylonia, and Sussans, including a residence among the linkh lyari a do her wild tribes before the discovery of hinereh. Ferral: Illust ations and Maps 2 Vols. Crown Sws. 224.

2 Vois. Crown Svs. 21s.

LEATHLS GYARLEY Practical Hebrew Grammar With the

Habrew Test of Genesis to-st, and Pashua 1-ri Grammatical Analysis and Vocabelery 1 one 8rc 7 ft 6d.

LENNPP (REV H J VAr) Missionary Travels in Asia Minor.

With Humanitary of Balling Street 1 ft.

With Illustrations of E blical Bistory and Archeelogy Map and Woodcuts, 2 Vols. Post 870. 244.

LENNEP Modern Customs and Manners of Bible Lands, in Illustration of Scripture Mans and Illus rations, 2 Vols Svo. 21s LESLIE (C R.) Handbook for Young Painters. Illustrations.

Post 8vo 7s 6d LETO (Powcowio) E ght Months at Rome during the Vatican

Council, 8vo 12s LETTERS FROM THE BALTIC. By LADY EASTLAND POSt 870 25 - Madras, By Mrs Mairland Post Svo 24

- SIERRA LEONE. By MES. MELVILLE. Sc Gd LEVI (LEONE) History of Brit sh Commerce and Economic Progress of the Nation, from 1 63 to 15"3. Sec 18

- The Wages and Eurnings of the Working Classes in 1983-L 800 Se fd
LEX SALICA the Ten Texts with the Glosses and the Lex

Emendata. Synoptical y edited by J. H. Heasers. With Notes on the Frankish Words in the Lex Salica by H. Krax of Leyden 4.0, 42r LIDDELL (Draw) "tudent a History of Rome from the earliest Times to the establishment of the Empire Woodenta, Post Syo. 7, 64.

LINDSAY (Load) Sketches of the History of Christian Art.

New El time 2 Vols. Crows 8rg at 18

LISPINGS from LOW LATITUDES or the Journal of the Hon.

Impalsia Gushington, Edited by Loso Dryszary With 26 Plates 4to 21s LIVINGSTONE (Dr.) First Expedition to Africa, 1840-56 Illustrations. Post Sva. 7s.64. -Second Expedition to Africa, 1858 64 Illustrations. Post 800 4 64 Last Journals in Central Africa, from 1865 to his Don b. Continued by a harrative of his last m ments and sufferings. By Mey Honage Wallen Maps and I ustra one. 2 tols 6vo 13s - Personal Lufe. Br Wm G Blaiki. DD With Map and Portra t. Sec 60

LIVINGSTONIA Journal of Adventures in Exploring Lake LIVINUSTONIA JOURNAL OF AGGENTATES IN FEMORING LAKE
Nysens and Frishblining a Missis ergy Settlement there. By E. D JOYSO R.N. Sieps. Fost five 71.62.
LIVONIAY TALES By the Author of "Letters from the Budde Fost five. Is LOCKHART G G) 'Ancient Spanish Ballads Historical and

Romantic, Translated with Notes Illustrations, Crown Svo Sa

- Life of Theodore Hook. Fcap. 8ve LOUDOY IN House of Record from Fright or Fund to on the work the hot fright of the Control of th or the Ninety five Thoses and Three Primary Works of Dr. Martin Let ber Portrain See, 12s LYAII (Sin Alrand C) K.C.B. Asiatic Stad es I eligions and Social Sva. 154

LYELL (Six Lucres) Students Floments of Geology A new FI im an imir revised by Panesses P M Dennes 1 R.S With ext | nerrations. Post 876. 9 -Life Letters and Journale. El ted by his sister-in law

Man Lyent With Fort alts. 2 Vols. Fro. 30s.

LYELL, (K M) Handbook of Ferns, Post 8vo % 6d LYNDHUEST (LORD) [See Makin]

LYTTON (Load) A Memoir of Julian Fane, Portrait Post
See Es
McCLINTOCK (Sig L) Narrative of the Discovery of the Fate of Sir John Franklin and I is Companions in the Article Seas.

With Illustrations Post Stor 7s 8d.
MADDONAI D (A) Too Late for G rion and Khartoum The ALCOUNAI D (A) Too Late for G Thou and Knarroum The Test mony of an Ini pendent Ere witness of the Heroic Efforts for their Rescue n i Bel of With Maps and t'l ns 8 o 1°2

MACGI EGOR (J) Rob Poy on the Jorian Nile Red Sea Gen nesareth de A Cance Criise in Pales ins and Egypt and the Waters of Damassus With of it are ions. Crown Sec 7s 6d.

MAETZNERS ENGLISH GRAMMAR, A Methodical, Analytical, and Historical Treatise on the O thography Procedy Infections, and System Style English Systems, By Claim J Gar, LI D 3 Notes, 800 Sec.

Syntax By Clais J Cas R. LI D S Yols. 8vo SG.
MAHON (Losp) [See Spashopz]
MAINE (Sta Il Sumser) Ancient Law its Connection with the Early History of Science and its Relation to Modern Ideas. Sec. 12s.

Village Communities in the Last and West. Sec. 12s.

Early History of Institutions, 8vo 12s

Dissertations on Larly Law and Custom Chiefly

Beleeted from Lectures delivered at Oxf rd. Sva. 124.

— lopular Government. Four Passas I — Prospects of Popular Governme I. II — As used libraries. III — Age of Itograss. II — L. nat. thou of the U. ted States. Svo. 12.

I rogers I be not then of he I tels states we less MALCOLM (Sta John) Sketches of Persia, Post 870. 35 6d.
MALIOCK (W. H.) Property and Progress or Facts against

Fallache. A tref F qury into Contemporary Social Aglation in England I wiske & B. MANSEL (Draw) Letters, Lectures and Reviews. Sto. 124

MANULI (Draw) Letters, Lectures and Heriews, 870, 129
MARCO POIO [See Yuz] Maps and Hinstrations, 2 Yols
Medium See 619

MARLHAM (Mas) History of England. From the First Invasion by the Romans continued dos to 1880 Woodents. 12ma, 25 64

History of France From the Conquest of Gaul by

(CLEMPATS R.) A Popular Account of 1 cruvian Bark not its invodes too is of 1 chiefd a. With Maps. 2 cot for 14.
MALSH (G I) but lent a Manual of the Inglish I suggaste

Ed ted with Add those, By Dr. We. Statte Post forc. Is fell
MARTIN ("In The born) Life of Lord Lyndhuret. Tith

MASTYLS in Fog ish Theology Lectures by I minent Divines.
With late 4 ten by Cappe Berry Louis a 7, 64

With Introduction by Canon Berry Joseph 7, 64 MATTHEF I CHEEK CRANNAL Abridged by BLONFISH Least by F & Lauren Line. 40

MAUIFLS Character Actions, and Writings of Wellington

MELAHI R (Hunnays) Marquesas and South Sea Islands, 9 Vols Post bra 1: MEREDITH (Man CHURLES) Notice and Sheiches of New South Water, Fost bra 1: MEXICO [See Brocklehuest-Puxtus]

MICHAEL ANGELO Sculptor Lainter and Architect. His Life and Worse, By C HEATH W LOUR I untra long, Bro 15c.

A Detienary of Pogli h Names of Plants MILLEP (Ww).

apried smong Englis, spinking, Peopli C Plants, Trees and Camba In Two larts. Ladin-hog shand English-Latin Medicin Sto Lar

MILMANS (Dear) WOPKS -

HIST RY OF THE JEWS from the earliest Period down to Mod th T mes. 3 bels. Post 8ro. 12s.

EARLY CHRISTIASITY from the B rth of Christ to the Aboli tion of Pagas am n he Loman Empire. 3 Vols. Post 8vo. 12s.

LATIN CHRISTIANITY inc d ng that of the Popes to the Pom Saucot h kies V by ke Pom See 3th. Handeoon to St. Parks Cathedral. Woodcuts. 10s 6d

Quinti Honarii Placer Opena. Woodenia. Sm Svo. 7a. 6d

FALL OF JERUSALEM, Forp Sto 1a.

- (Capr E. A) Wave de Cross. Post 8ro 2s.

Corresponde co and Journ & Dy his Cister May Evn. 12s. MILNE (David M 1) A Readable D ctionary of the English

Lugue, Crova Svo. MINCHIN (J G). The Growth of Freedom in the Balkan

Pest u.a An Ilis i al Descri ive Arroun of Monanter Bosnia Berria, Bu garla and G core. W a M p. Crown Src 10: fd.

MIVAKT (Sr George) Lessons from Nature as manufested in Mini and Matter fro. 13

— The Cat. An Introduction to the S ndy of Backboned Anima especially Mammal W DWOII owns line, Med amityo. "Os MONTEFIOLE (IS MOSE Select one from Let ers and Journald, By Lucies Work With Pertrait, Grown See 10a 6d.

MOGGRIDCE (M W) Method in Alm.giving A Handbook

MOORE (THOMAS) Lafe and Letters of Lord Byron, [See Brace] MOTLEY (J L.) History of the United Netherlands from the Dea hof Wil am the S lent to the Twelve Lears' Truce, 1839 Portraits

4 Vols. Post Svo. 6c, each. Life and Death of John of Barneveld

Wha View of the Primary Caness and M vem attrof the Thirty hears War Mastrations " Vols. Post 6ve 12s MOZLEY (CANON) Treatise on the Appustment doctrine of Predestination with an Analysis of the Contents Crown Svo. 9s.

MUNEO'S (GENERAL) Lafe and Letters. By REV G R. GLEIG Post Syo. & &L

MUNTHE (Axel Letters from a Mourn ng C'ty Naples dur ing the Au umn of 1684. Translated by Maton Valence Weite.

With a Proutisonce Crown 5ro 64.

HURCHISON (SIR ROPERCE) And his Contemporaries. By Accessate General Poetrals, 2 Vol. 8to, 20t. HURRAY (A S). A History of Greek Sculpture from the Earliest Tunes. With 130 lituatrations, 2 Vol. Keyal 8to 5.4.

MURRAY'S MAGAZI'NE. A New Home and C loned Monthly
Pero cal. 14 Vol. I Jan.—June 157 Vol. II Joly December 1537 N wrealy 8vo. 17 6d. each
"Forwarded Monthly on record of an annual subscription of 13s

MUSTERS (CAPT) Patagonians, a Year's Wanderings over Untrodden Ground from the Straits of Magellan to the Rio Negro. Illustrations Post Syn 75 8d

NADAULIAC (Marous pr) Prehistoric America. Translated by N D Axvers With Hustrations Svo 16s

NAPIER (GENERAL SIR CHARLES) His Life By the Hop WM har En Bruce With Portrait and Mans Crown 8vo 12s

— (Gent Bis Grosch T) Passages in his Early Military Life written by himself. Ldited by his Son, General WM C L. Narren. With Portrait, Crown Svo. " 6 Gd

- (Sie Wm) English Battles and Sieges of the Peninsular War Portrait Post 810 99

NAPOLLON AT FORTAINEBLEAU AND ELBA Journals. Notes of Conversations By Siz Neil Campbell Portrait Syo 15s

NASMYTH (James) An Autobiography . Edited by Samuel Smiles LLD with Portrait, and "O Illustrations New Ldition post

8ve 8s or Large Paper, 16
And JAMES CARPENTER The Moon

sidered as a Planet a World and a Satellite With 26 Plates and numerous Woodcuts New and Cheaper Edition Medium 870 21s NEW TESTAMENT TESTAMENT With Short Explanatory Commentary By Archoracon Churrov M.A. and the Bignor of Sr Davin's With 110 authentic Views Ac. 2 Vols Crown Src 21s bound.

NEWTH (SAMUEL) First Book of Natural Philosophy an Intro

and Sound with numerous Examples, Small Svo. 3s 6d.

Elements of Mechanics, including Hydrostatics

with numerous Examples Small Syn Re 6d Mathematical Examples A Graduated Series of Elementary Framples in Arithmet c Algebra, Logarithms Trigonometry and Michau ca. Small 6vo 8s 6d

NIMROD On the Chace-Turf-and Road With Portrait and Plates Crown Syo 5s Oz with Coloured Plates, 7s 6d. Communistic Societies of the United

NORDHOFF (CHAR) States With 40 Hinstrations, 6vo 15s

NORTHCOTES (SIR JOHN) Notebook in the Long Parliament. Containing Proceedings during its First Session 1640 Edited with a Memoir by A. H. A Hamil on. Crown Svo. 9s.

O CONNELL (DANIEL) Correspondence of (See Fitz PATRICE)

ORNSBY (PROF R) Memoirs of J Hope Scott, QC (of Abbotsford) With Scientisps from his Correspondence 2 vols, Sec 24s OTTER (R. H)

Winters Abroad Some Information respecting Places vis ted by the Author on account of he Health Intended for the Use and Guidance of Invalids. 7s 6d.

OVID LESSONS [See Erox]

OWIN (INST COL.) Principles and I ractice of Modern Artillery, forling Art ery Mae 1st G meery and Organization and Lee of Art Hery in Warfare With Illustra ions. See. 18.

ONEVHAM (INST W) English Notes for Latin Figure PAGET (LORD Grozon) The Light Cavalry Brigade in the

Crimes. Map Crown Sec. 10s. 6d PALGRAVE (R H I) Local Taxation of Great Britain and PALLISER (Mas). Mottoes for Monuments, or Epitaphe selected for General Los and Study With Illustrations, Crown Sta. In 61.

PANKHURST (E. A.). The Wildom of Liminal Burke: Being helections from his Specifics and Willings, edited bearing upon Political Questions Fep. Fep. 51.

PARIS (Da.). Philosophy in Sport made Science in Farnest; er, the First Principles of Natural Philosophy inculated by all of the Toys and Sports of Youth. Woodcats, Post tra. Is 64.

PARKYNS' (Maxertum) Three Years' Residence in Abpainia; with Travels in that Country. With Elementations. Post Sea. 1s. 64.

PEEL'S (Sta Rosear) Memoirs, 2 Vols, Post Srp. 15s. PENN (Richard). Maxims and Hints for an Angler and Chassplayer. Woodente, Frap. ben. Is.

PERCY (Jone, M.D.). METALLIEROT. Fuel, Wood, Peat, Coal, Charmal Cake, Fire-Clays, Platrations, Sec. 34. - Lead, including part of Silver. Illustrations. Svo. 80s.

- Silver and Gold. Part I. Illustrations, Sec. 30c. PERRY (RET. Cares). Life of St. Hugh of Avalon, Bishop of Lincoln, Post 8vo. 1's, 6d.

- History of the English Church. See Syrpeyrs' Manuals.

PERSIA. [See Berganin.] -PHILLIPS (Sawret). Literary Essays from "The Times." With

Portrait, 2 Vote, Teap.bvo. Ta. POLLOCK (C. E.). A book of Family Prayers. Sciented from the Liveryy of the Church of England 14me. 24 64. POPES (ALEXANDER) Works. With Introductions and Notes by ERT. W. ELWIS, and W. J. Courtners. Yels. J.-IV., YI.-X. With Portraits, Sec. 10s. 6d each (Yol. V., containing the Life and a General Index, is in preparation.)

FORTER (Rav. J. L.). Damaseus, Palmyra, and Lebanon. Map. and Woodcuts, Post Sys. Tr. S.L. PRAYER-BOOK (BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED). With Notes, by

REV. TROS. JAMES. Medium Svo. 15s. cloth. OF WALES. PRINCESS CHARLOTTE Memoir and Correspondence, By Lapy Ross WEIGALL, With Portrait, 5vo. Ss. &f.

PRIVY COUNCIL JUDGMENTS in Ecclesiastical Cases relating to Doctrine and Discipline. Swo. 10s. 6d. PSALMS OF DAVID. With Notes Explanatory and Critical by

Dean Johnson, Canon Elliott, and Canon Cook. Medium 6vo. 10s. 61. PUSS IN BOOTS. With 12 Illustrations. By Orro SPECKTER. ISmo. 1s. 64 . Or coloured, 2s. 64

QUARTERLY REVIEW (Tux). 8vo. 6s.

RAE (EDWARD). Country of the Moors. A Journey from Tripoli to the Holy City of Kairwan. Map and Etchings, Crown Sto. 12s. . - The White Sea Peninsula. Journey to the White

Sea, and the Rolz Penincola. Map and Illustrations, Crown Sec. 15s. (George). The Country Banker; His Clients, Cares, and Work, from the Experience of Forty Years. Grown 870 7s. 64.

RAMBLES in the Syrian Deserts. Post 8vo. 10s. 6d.

RASSAM (Horneys). British Mission to Abyssiois. Illustrations, 2 Yels, 8vo, 234,

RAWLINSON S (CANON) Five Great Monarch es of Chalden Augria, Maclia, Babylonia, and Persia. With Maps and Illustrations and the New All

3 tota bys. 42

(Sig Hexry) England and Pussis in the East a 8 first of layers on the Corit on of Central Asia. Mar. Sig. La.

REED(r E. J) Iron Clad Ships the r Qual Les Performances and Cost Vib II at attent. Sta. 12c.

Letters from I are a in 18" ... 8vo 5r

Javan Its Hi tory Trad to no and Pel grant. With

A Practical Treat e on h plunding in Iron and Seed.
Secondardre and ed in with Plans and Woodcute. See

REJECTED ADDILESSES (THE) By JAMES AND HORACE SETTLE WOODCLE. 1co 5 o 2s fd. or Popular Essays, Seep. Sto 1s. PEMBUAN DT [See MILLIANDS]

PEVISED VEL. ON OF N T [-- BETTET BERGON-CO.E.] RICARDO'S (David) Works. With a Notice of his Lif and Withers, By R. MUCHACOL. See, 18

BIPA (PATRES). Peeld noe at the Court of Poking. Post Sto. 2... ROBELTSON (Capos). His tory of the Christian Church from the Apos olik Ages to be Fed romano. 15.7. 6 Vols. Post Sto. E. excel. POBINSON (FEE DE.). B. block Percepthes in Patestine and the

POBINGON (Fav Dr.) B blical Percarches in Palestine and the Administration 187-42. Maps. SVoiz See 4.4. (Nu.) Alpine Flowers for English Gardens. With

Tollowin ma Cose Sto 5164. With an IPostrated
Dictorary of a the Tr to med, and Dictorary of a the Tr to med.

The Vertal Carden or the Ea be Vertalite.

* is a sail the en a ed in larger no an men By MM. Vinnous Angerer. With 5 Plantanes. So 154 "but Trop cut Garden. Thus rations Small Sto 54.

Parks and Gadens of Paris or n.i.d red in Elitor to be Wents of other tips and o Paile and Private Guidess. With 50 Hinterations. For 19.

Wild Garden or Our Grores and Gardens.

med Esper ally he a turnilesson of Hardy Ex the Pialit. With 80 H natradams, for 1 and 1 a Future. With Singerstrains, for a felt of the Comments of the EOMANS of lead as Ep tile to the With Notes and Comments of the E H G group D.D. Aradeannof the on Medium See and

BOME (History or) [See Gizzon—Inge Lindhill Shifts—British's

BOMILLY (Hyer H) The Verley Page and 3 - Coma Treatuse on Pattle Response A typed Vote by Ballot Crown Syn. St.

EUMBOLD (In Horact) The Great Stirer River Votes of a Rei cross in he A gentine Lepetate With Identifications. Syn. Lit.
EULTO (Gro. F). Travels in Mexico with Adventures among Wild

Tribes and Animals of the Prairies and Eocky Mountains. Post eye.

BT HUGH OF AVALON [See PERRY]

ST JOHN (CHARLES) Wild Sports and Natural History of the Bighlands of Sco land I Instrated Edition. Crown 8vo 15s Cheap Ed non Post 8vo 3s 64

(BAYLE) Adventures in the Libyan Desert Post Svo 2s

BAI DANHA (DUKE OF) | See CARNOTA] SALE'S (SIR ROBERT) Brigade in Affi, banistan. With an Account of

the Defence of Jet alabad By RET G R GLE G Post 8vo 2s
SALMO\ (PR F GEORGE D D) An In roduct on to the Study of the New Te tament and an Inves gat n in a M d rn Bib cal Cri can has don the n stree ne so cerof i formation Svo. 16s

- I ectures on the Infall b lity of the Church

SCEPTICISM IN GEOLOGY and the Realons for It. An assemblage of facts from Nature con bining to refute the theory of Causes now in Action " By km r zn Woodcuts, Grown Syn. Se SCHLIYMA'N (Dr. Havar). Ancient Mycenæ With 500
III stration Medium 8ro 50s.
Hos the City and Country of the Trojans

With an Autobiograp y Wi h 200 I us.ra i ms. Imperial Svo 50s. 11013 Re-ults of the Late t Researches and D scoverios on the site of Homer's Troy and other sites made in 1 81. W th Maps 1 ans and Illust a a us. Mod un 5vo 4 s.

- Tryns A trebistor c Palace of the K ngs of Tirus di overed by resera i ma is 1884 a. uh Preface and Now the Profe a c Ad er and 1 orp id. Wi h Colored Li hor spis Wood Colored Li ans de from J awings them on the spot Jictical Stor 428 SCHOMBERG (GEXEMAL) The Odvery of Homer, rendered into English verse "vols. 500 218.

SCOTT (Siz Cilleger) The Ruse and Development of Med aval Archi ecture Wi h 400 H u tra lons 2 Vols. Med um 8vo. 42s. SCPUTTON (T E.) The Laws of Copyright, An Examination of he l'inches which and d'equis al. erary and affiste Pro-SEEBOIM (Haray) Shernain Asia. With De rytions of the 'a wall lister' Migrations of he'de? I att in Crown See 14 SELBOIME (Loar) Notes on some Passages in the Littingual

History of the Pef rmed Engli b Church, Svo. 6.

SHADOWS OF A SICL ROOM Preface by Canon Lippon

16ma, "1 64 SHAH OF I LESIA S Diary during his Tour through Europe in 18'3 With Portrai Crown Svo 12a.

BHAN (T B.) Manual of English Literature. Post Svo "s 6d. - Spec mens of Portish Literature Selected from the Chief Wet ers Post Bro Te &L.

- (Rossar) Vist to High Tartary Yarkand and Kashgar, and Rettrn Journey over the Karakorum Pass. With Lap and

I ustra ons. 6vo SIEMI VS (Sta Wat) C.P Life of By Wm. Pour C.E. Sto

Selection from the Papers of, 2 vols 8vo SIERRA LFON! Described in Letters to Friends at Home. By Man Mr v LLB Post Svo Sa. S.L.

SIMMONS (Carr.) Constitution and Practice of Courts-Mar. tlat 8vo. 15s.

BMILES (SANUEL LILD) WOPKS -

Barrish Fromanas from the Earliest Period to the death of the Stephensons. Limitrations, 5 Vols. Crown Syn. 7s &f each.

SMILES (SAMUEL LL D) WORLS-continued

LIFE AND LABOUR, or, Characteristics of Men of Industry, Culture, and Genius. Post hvo fie

GEORGE STEPHENSON Post 8vo 2s 6d.

JAMES NASMETH. Portrait and Illustrations. Post 8vo 6s SCOTCH NATURALIST (THOS. EDWARD) Illustrations, Post 870 65 SCOTCH GEOLOGIST (ROBERT DICK) Illustrations Cr Svo 12s RUGUENOTS IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND Crown Sec. 78 6d. SELV HELP With Illustrations of Conduct and Persever-

ance Post Syo, 6s CHARACTER A Book of Noble Characteristics, Post 810, 65 THEFFT A Book of Domestic Counsel. Post Svo 6s

Dury With Illustrations of Courage, Patience, and Endurance. Post Syo 6:

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY, or, Iron-Workers and Tool Makers Post Syo. 6e

MEY OF INVESTION AND INDUSTRY Post Sec Boy's VOTAGE ROUND THE WORLD Hiustrations. Post Svo. 65

SMITH (Dr. Gronor) Student s Manual of the Geography of British India Physical and Political, With Maps 1 ost eve. 7s. 6d - Life of John Wilson, D.D. (Bombay), Missionary and Philanthropist Portrait Post 6vo Pa.

— Lafe of Wm Carey, D.D., 1761—1834 Shoemaker and Missionary Profestor of Sauscrit, Regulee and Marathee at the College of Fort William Calculta. Lorizati and Hustrations. Syn. 162. - (PHILIP) History of the Ancient World, from the Creation to the Fall of the Roman Empire, A.p. 476. 3 Vols 8vo. 21s 6d.

SMITH S (Dr. 1\ m) DICTIONARIES - :

Gerry and lower

DICTIONARY OF THE DIBLE, its Antiquities, Biography, Geography and Datural History Hustrations, 3 Lots 670 1005 CONCISE BIBLE DICTIONARY Illustrations, 8vo 21s SHALLER BIBLE DICTIONARY Illustrations, Post Svo 7s. G.J. CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITIES. Comprising the History, Instit tions, and Antiplities of the Christian Church Illustrations, 3 vols. Medium Svo. 3/ 13s. 6d

CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, SECTS, AND DOCTRIBES, from the Times of the Apes les to the Ago of Charlemagne, Medium 6v how complete in 4 Valu. El. 16s C.C.

GREEK AND POMAN ANTIQUITIES. Illustrations, Med Svo 29, GERRE AND ROMAN BIOGRAPHY AND METHOLOGY, Illustrations. S Tols Medium fivo. 41 4s GEOGRAPHY. 2 Vols. Illustrations.

Medium 6vo. 864. ATLES OF ARCIEST GEOGRAPHY-BIBLICAL AND CLASSICAL

Polla EL Ca CLIMICAL DICTIONARY OF METHOLOGY, BIOGRAPHY, AND

GEOGRAPHY 1) of, With T30 Woodcute, Pro. 180 FRALLER CLASSICAL DICT Woodcuts. Crown Sto. 74 CL

PRALLER DEFINITE PARTY OF GREEK AND POWER APPLICITIES.
Woodcate Crowder To 66.
Crowstark Astron Services Dirity wary Vith Tables of the Erona Chinete Heaves, Westba and Merry Bre Michigan.
Facture Lainer Facture Directorate New And thereughly

Berlevi Le tion I Ima, ta &L

BMITHS (Dr. Ww) ENGLISH COURSE -

COPIOUS AND CRITICAL ENGLISH LATIN DICTIONARY SVO 21s

SMALLER ENGLISH | ATIN DICTIONARY 12mo 7s. 6d.

SCHOOL MANUAL OF PROLISH GRAMMAR WITH COPIOUS EXERCISES.

and Appendices Post Syo Sr 6d PRIMARY ENGLISH GRANNAR for Elementary Schools with

carefolly gradua cd P raing Leasons 16mo 1s
MANUAL OF ENGLISH COMPOSITION With Copious Illustrations and Prac teal Exercises. 12mo. 2s 6d

PRIMARY HISTORY OF BRITAIN 12mc 2s 6d.

SCHOOL MANUAL OF MODERY GEOGRAPHY PHYSICAL AND Pol tleat Post 8vo 5e A SHALLER MANUAL OF MODERN GROGRAPHY 16mo 2s 6d.

BMITHS (Dr. WM) FRENCH COURSE -

Part I A First Course containing a FRENCH PRINCIPIA Grammar Delec to Exercises and Vocabularies, 12mo, 3s 6d, APPENDIX TO FRENCH PRINCIPLE Part I, Containing ad ditional Fixe class with Liaminstion Papers, 12mo, 2s 6d

FRENCH PRINCIPLA Part II A Reading Book containing Fab es S ories and Anecdotes Natural History and Scenes from the History of France With Grammancal Questions, Notes and copious

Ltymolog cal D ctionary 12mo 4s 6d. FRENCH PRINCIPIA. Part III Prose Composition containing If site on Trans a on of English Into F encl the Princ pal Rules of the French Syn ax compa of with the Lunglish, and a Syn ematic Course of Exercise the Syntax 12mo. 4: 50

STUDENT'S FRENCH GRAMMAR. With Introduction by M Littré

Post Sec 6s SMALLER GRAMMAR OF THE PREYOR LANGUAGE. Abridged from the above 12mo & 6d

SMITH'S (DE WM) GERMAN COURSE .--

GERMAN PRINCIPIA Part I A First German Course contain ing a Grammar Delectus Exe cise Book, and Vocabularies 12mo & &L GERMAN PAINCIPIA. 1 art II A Reading Book containing Fab os, Arcedotes, Na ural History and Secure for the His ory of Germany Wi h Quee ons ho es and Dictionary 12ma, 2s 6d.

Practical German Germans. Post 8vo 2s 6d

SMITH S (DR WE.) ITALIAN COURSE -

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA

TAILAN PRINCIPIA. Parl I An Italian Course containing a few parl of the parl I and Italian Course containing a few Italian Conversation to the most service of the containing and few Italian Conversation and First Italian Reading Book containing Fables And dotes History and Fassa se from the best parl of the containing Fables And dotes History and Fassa se from the best palsan Athory with Caramartical questions Associated toploors ITALIAN PRINCIPIA Etymological D ctionary 12mo. 8s bd.

SMITH'S (Dr. Wk) LATIN COURSE -

THE YOUNG BEGINNERS FIRST LATIN BOOK Containing the Rud ments of Grammar Easy Grammat cal Que loss and Exerc ses with bond larius Be up a S spying atom to Principia Latina, Part I for boung Chi den 12mo 2

THE YOUNG BEGINFERS SECOND LATIN BOOK Containing an easy Latin Reading Book w h an Analysis of the S atences Notes and a Di t onery Be og a Stepping stone to Principle Latina Part II for Young Children 12mo 2

SMITH S (Dr. WR) I arts Course-co I nuch

I PIRCIPIA LATERA | Latt | Littl Latin Course, containing a Oranmar luler unand har related on with heads latt a 1 ma. 28 M. "a" last i al locable (accord the Noton, Adject a, Abad P. couna greatrage due has but a com park Oranusam and as in the linear

But I fares, but of w b the corresponding for cases. Appendix to Intecepta Latina late I leing Adillious!

Instant at h Finning ton laters I am to to

I RESCIPIA LATERA LIFT II A Realing book of Diplocity, Cog sply I omsu An iqu et, and II sto y With hotes and Distemper 12co Se Ed.

PRINCIPIA LATINA LAPI III A Poetry Book Hexameters and Pen ame re led g tre d sur La in tropody 12mo 2s 64.

PRINCIPIA LATERA Part IN Trace Composition links of Eyn ax whis transpler implementations of Synonyms and Exercises on the Syn ax, 120. 3 cd.

PRINCIPIA I ATINA PART \ Short Tales and Anecdotes for Transl on in o La in 12mm 34

LATIN PROLIEN VOCABULARY AND FIRST LATIN PROLISH
1 TOWART PURPISE & COMPELIEN PROS AN CS AR. 1200 Se 64
STUDENTS LATIN CHANNAR. For the H gher Forms. A new

Adth raghy reel at lition. Po these of Smaller latin Gramman. New Litton. 10 mg. Se Gd. Tactron. Grammania. Agricola. and linin Book of the

SMITHS (DR WE) GRYLL COURS! -

INITIA GRACA LARTE A First Orcek Course containing a Grammer 1 beet a not Exemples book. With local taries 12mc. Se &t. Arekabix to Initia Graca Lart I Centaining additional Lecties With Lyan in ton Pape a. Lost Svo. 22. 5d Initia Graca. Lart 11 A Reading Book Containing Short Talon Anecdotes Fabou Myth togy and Greeian History 12ms. 5c 64.

INITIA GRACA. Part III Proze Composition Containing the I less of Eyo az with copie * Examp es and Fize class 12mo. St. 61. STUDERT'S GREYK GRANMAR. For the Higher Forms Posters 62.

SMALLER OREER GRAMMAR. 1ºmo 3s 0d

OREER ACCIDETOR, 12mo 2s. 6d.
Plato Apology of Socrates &c. With Notes, 12mo 3s 6d

SMITHS (Dr. Wm) SMALLIER HISTORIES -SCRITTERS HISTORY With Maps and Woodcuts. 16mo

ANCIENT HISTORY Woodcots, 16mo 3s 6d.
ANCIENT GEOGRAPHY Woolcuts, 16mo 3s 6d.

MODERS Grogsaphy 16mo 2s 6d.

GREEGE. With Coloured Map and Woodcuts 16mo 2s 6d.
ROME With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. 16mo 3s 6d.
CLASSICAL MYTHOLOGY Woodcuts. 18mo 2s 6d.
ERGLAND WI h Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. 16mo 3s 6d

ENGL SH LITERATURE 16mo 3s 6d SPECIMENS OF FRONTS LATERATURE. 18mo 3s 8d.

SOMERVILLE (MARY) Physical Geography Portrait. Post

Connexion of the Physical Sciences. Post 8vo 9.

SOMERVILLE (MART) Molecular and Microscopic Science. Illustrat ons. 2 Vols Pos Svo 21s

SOUTH (JOHN F) Household Surgery or, Hints for Emergen eles With Wooden & Fran Sto 32 64.

Memoirs of ["ce l'eiror.]

SOUTHEY (Rost) I ives of B myan and Cromwell, Post 8yo 2s STANHOPE'S (EARL) WORKS -

HISTORY OF LUCIAND FROM THE PERSON OF QUEEN ANNE TO THE PEACE OF \ ZESAILLES 1701-SL 9 TO # Post Sec. 5: each LIVE OF WILLIAM PITT POPTRAILS 3 Vols. 8TO 3Gs.

BRITISH INDIA PROX ITS ORIGIN TO 1783 Post 8vo 24 6d

HISTORY OF FORTY FIVE" Post STO 3:

HISTORICAL AND CRITICAL ESSAYS Post Svo St. 64 THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW AND OTHER ESSAYS. Post 810 7s 6d

LIPE OF BELISLEDE. LOSL STO. 10s 6d Largor Comps Post 8vo Ss 6d

STORY OF JOAN OF ARC FEED BYO 14 ADDRESSES ON VARIOUS OCCASIONS 16mo 1s

STANLEY'S (DEAN) WORLD -

SINAL AND PALESTINE Coloured Maps. 840 12s BIBLE IN THE HOLY LAND Extracted from the above Work.

Woodcuts Fcap Sec 2: 62

Eastern Church Plans Crown 8ve Gs
Jewish Church, From the Earliest Times to the Christian

Em Portrait and M pa 3 Vols Crown 8vo 15a, Church of Scotland 8vo 7s 6d PRINTERS OF ST. PAUL TO THE CORESTRIANS. 8vo. 18s.

LITTL OF DR. ARNOLD PORTRAIL 2 Vols. Cr 8vo 12s. CANTERBURY Illustrations, Crown Sec 63

Westwinster Arrest Illustrations, 8vo 15a. Servors Personed in Westwinster Abber 8vo 12s

MENOIS OF EDWARD CATHERINE AND MARY STARLEY Cr 8vo 9s CHRISTIAN INSTITUTIONS. Essays on Euclesiastical Subjects

8re 12: Or t rown five. fa. Essays Chiefly on Questions of Church and State from 1850 to 1870 Crown 800 8s

SERMONS AND AIDRESSES TO CHILDREN including the Beati todes, the Fa hful Servant &c Cr wu Sec. 2s 62

Fee also BRADLET STEBBIAG (Wm) Some Verdicts of H story Persewed Svo 12s STEPHENS (Ray W. R. W) Lef and Times of St. John Chrysostom A Ske ch of the Church and the Luplre in the Fourth Century Portrait Sec. 74 et.

STREET (O. E.) R. A. Gothne Architecture in Spain. Illustra tions, Royal 8vo 30a.

- Gothic Architecture in Brick and Marble With Notes on North of Italy 1 wrati no E val Syn. 26s. - A Memoir of by h a Son Astres EDMUND STREET Por trait 8vo. STUART (VILLERS) Egypt after the War With Descriptions of the Homes and Habt of the Nativas, &c Coloured Hustrations and Woodcats, Egyslev, 31s, 64 STUDENTS MANUALS. POST 870 7, 6d pick Volume -

Howes History or Excland from the Invasion of Julius Crear to the Revolution in 1683. Revised and continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1873. By J. S. Brawar M.A. Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. Or in 3 parts price 72 d. each.  Questions on the above Work 12mo 22

HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE from the full of Constantinople to t e Treaty of Ber in 1875. By R. Longe M A.

OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY, from the Creation to the Return of the Jews from Captivity Woodcuts.

NEW TESTAMENT HISTORY With an Introduction connecting the History of the Old and New Ten aments. Woodents EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY By H. WAGE, D.D. 1/n the Press

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY a History of the Christian Church from its foundati n till ofter tile kef rma ion. By PHILIP SHITH B A Wi h numerous Woodcuts. 2 Vols. PART L A.D 30-1003 PART II -1003-1614.

Excusu Caunca History from the Planting of the Church in Great Britain to the S lending of Convocat on in the 18 h Cent. By CAPON PERRY 2 Vols. Frst Perud A.D. 598-1509 Second Perud 1509-1717

ARCIENT HISTORY OF THE EAST EGYPT, Assyria, Babylonia, Med a Fersia, Ania Minor and Phone cia. By Philip Entry, R.A. Woodcule

- GEOGRAPHY By CANON BEVAN Woodcuts. HISTORY OF GREECE from the Earliest Times to the Roman

Conquest. By Ws Smrn, D.C. Woodcuts.

 Questions on the above Wo k 12mo. 2s HISTORY by Rowz from the Earliest Times to the Establish ment of the Empire By DEAN Lap sta. Woodcots

GIRBOR'S DECLIRE AND FALL OF THE ROWAN EMPIRE. Woodcuts. HALLAMS BISTORY OF LUROPE during the Middle Ages. HALLAMS HISTORY OF ENGLAND from the Accession of

Henry VII to the Death of George II HISTORY OF FRANCE from the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire. By H W Juness. With Coloured Maps and Voodenta. ENGLISH LANGUAGE. By GRO P MARSH ERGLISH L. TERATURE. By T. B. SRAW M.A.

SPECIMENS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By T. R. SHAW

Modern Geography Mathematical Physical and Descriptive By Carox | Evan M A. Woode ta. Geography of British Ispia Political and Physical. By

GRAGE SRITH LL D Maps MOBAL LEILOSOPHY BY WM FLENING

SUMNER'S (B snor) Life and It iscopate during 40 Years. By

Rev G H SUNNER. Portrait. Sen. 14s. SWAINSON (CAROR) N cene and Apos les' Creeds Their

Literary lin ory toge ber with some Account of "The Croed of St. Afterns a" Syo. 184 SWIFT (JONATHAN). [See CRAIK.]

SYREL (Now Wastery of Furope during the French Revolution STMO LIS (REV W) I coords of the Pocks or Notes on the

Geology of Wales, Devon and Cornwa L Cown Stn. 12s

- TEMPLE (Sta Richard), India in 1880. With Maps, 8vo. 16r. - Men and Events of My Time in India. 8vo. 10s.

- Oriental Experience. Essays and Addresses de-livered on Various Occasions. With Maps and Woodcuts. 670, 16s. Essays and Addresses de-THIBAUTS (Aurores). Purity in Musical Art. With Prefatory

Memoit by W. H. Gladstone, M.P. Post 8vo. Ta. 6d.
THIELMANN (Babox). Journey through the Caucasus to Tabreez, Kristians, down the Tigric and Empirates to Minorch and Palmyra. Illustrations. 3 Vols. Post 8vo. 18s.

THOMSON (Arcanismor). Lincoln's Inn Sermons. 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Life in the Light of God's Word. Post 8vo. 5s. -Word, Work, & Will; Collected Essays, Crown Syo. 9s. THORNHILL (MARK). The Personal Adventures and Experiences of a Magistrateduring the Rise, Progress, and Suppression of the Indian Mutury. With Frontispiece and Plan. Crown 8vo. 12s.

TITIAN'S LIFE AND TIMES. With some account of his Family, from unpublished Records. By CROWE and CAVALCASELLE.
Illustrations, 2 Vots, 8vo, 21a TOCQUEVILLE'S State of Society in France before the Revolution,

1789, and on the Causes which led to that Event, Syo. 14s. TOM LINSON (CHAR). The Sonnet: Its Origin, Structure, and Place in Poetry. Post Svo. 9s. TOZEE (Itev. H. F.). Highlands of Turkey, with Visits to Mounts 1da, Athos, Olympus, and Pellon. 2 Vols. Crown 8vo. 24s.

Lectures on the Geography of Greece. Post 8vo. 9s. TRISTRAM (Canow), Great Sahara, Illustrations, Crown 8vo. 15s. Land of Moab : Travels and Discoveries on the Esst

Side of the Dead Sea and the Jordan, Hostrations, Crown Syo. 15s, TWINING (REv. THOS.). Recreations and Studies of a Country Clergyman of the Last Century, Crown Svo, 2s

- PAPERS (Selections from the). Being a Sequel to the "Recreations of a Country Clergyman of the 18th Century."
Edited by Richard Twisiag Crown Sec. 92 - (Louisa). Symbols and Emblems of Early and

Mediseral Cartation Art. With 5"0 Huetrations from Paintings, Miniatures, Scutptures, &c. Crown 8vo. 14. TWISS' (Horace) Life of Lord Eldon. 2 Vols. Post 8vo. 21s. TYLOR (E. B.). Researches into the Early History of Mankind.

and Development of Civilization, 3rd Edition, 8vo. 12s. Primitive Culture : the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Art. and Custom. 2 Vols. 8vo. 24s.

VATICAN COUNCIL. [See Lero.] VIRCHOW (PROFESSOR). The Freedom of Science in the Modern State. Fcap. Svo. 2s.

WACE (REV. HENRY), D.D. The Principal Facts in the Life of our Lord, and the Authority of the Evangelical Narratives. Post 8vo. - The Foundations of Faith. Bampton Lectures for 1879.

Second Edition, 8vo. 7s. 6s.
- Christianity and Morality. Boyle Lectures for 1874 and

1975. Seventh Edition, Crown Svo. Sz. WELLINGTON'S Despatches in India, Denmark, Portugal, Epain, the Low Countries, and France, 8 Vols. Svo. £3 8a.

Supplementary Despatches, relating to Indis, Ireland, Denmark, Spanish America, Spain, Portugal, France, Congress of Vienna, Waterloo, and Paris, 15 Vols, Svo. 20s. each. WELLINGTON'S Civil and Political Correspondence Vols L to VIII 670 20e rach

- Speeches in Parliament, 2 Vols, 8vo 42s WESTCOTT (Canon B 1) The Goss of according to St John, with hotes and Dissertati na (Reprinted from the Spraker & Commentary). Pen. 1 s 6d

WHARTON (CAPT W J L) R W Hydrographical Surveying

being a doc lpt not the means and me hode employed in constructing liarine Cla ta. Will lit sita to a Sec 100 WHEELLR (G) Choice of a Dwelling Port 8vo 7s 6! WHITE (W H) Manual of Naval Architecture for the use of

Naval Officers 81 lubuilders and Yacl tape &c Hinetrations Sto 261 WHYMPFR (EDWARD) The Ascent of the Matterhorn 100 lil stret ons Media u Bro. 109 6d

WILBEI FORCES (Bisnop) Lafe of William Wilberforce. Portrait. Crown 850 & - (ARUEL LI D), Lord Bishop of Oxford and

Wit chester his Life By Can & Aspwett D D and R. G Witter PORCE, Will I or raits and Woode ta 3 bole bro. 15 exch WILKINSON (Sind O) Ma ners and Custon s of the Ancient Exyptians the Private life laws A to Religion, de A new telition Edit d by Saure, B nen LL 11 litustrations, 8 left 6vo 84. - I opular Account of the Ancient I gyptians. With

500 Woodcuts 2 Vols Post 8ro 12s WILLIAMS (SIR MOSIER) Brai manism and Hinduism Religious Thought and I ife in ladia as based on the Veds. See 10: 6d

Buddalem With a Chapter on Jamesm Un the Press _____ Sakoontals, or The Lost Ping An I Drams Transla ed in a kngli h I rose and Verse Sro 7: 63 An Indian

WILSON (Jony D D) ['ee Smith, Geo] WINTLE (II G) Oud Lessors 12mo, 2s 6d [See Erox] WOOD'S (Carrain) Source of the Orns. With the Geography of the Salley of the Craus By Con. Your May 8vo 12s. WOPDS OF HUMAN WISDOM Collected and Arranged by

E 8 Wi ha P eface by Canon Lind w Feap 8vo. 3 64

E S Wilh a F rice by Caron Lion x Fess Sec. 3 67 w0 MDSN OUTLE S (Baston) Greece, 1 selections, Descriptive, and Historical Ni ha 1 r does on on the Claracterist one of Gree Arc. With 6 of 11 arc. has B crys Sec. 3 k r G at H 1 Tozon, M A. With 6 of 11 arc. has B crys Sec. 3 k r G at H 1 Tozon, M A. With 6 of 11 arc. has B crys Sec. 3 k r G at H 1 Tozon, M A. With 6 of 11 arc. has B crys Sec. 3 k r G at H 1 Tozon, M A. With 6 of 12 arc. has part of 1 arc. has part

YOPK GATL I IBI ARY (Latel goe of | Pormed by Mr Silver.

YOPK GATL 1181 AN1 (Letal goe of). Furmed by Mr Sitters, An I det up the Literature of Geograph Martline and Island An I det up the Literature of Geograph Martline and Island trade. Set in 1988 See and Let be greatly enlarged and this trade. Set in 1988 See and Let be greatly enlarged and this trade. Set in 1988 See and Let be greatly enlarged and this trade. Set in 1988 See and Let be greatly enlarged and the Table. The Let also the Let also